International

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger yesterday proposed a $7.5 billion rescue operation to "roll back the desert" in a droughtdevastated region of West Africa. He made the proposal in a speech in Dakar, Senegal, on his sixth visit to an African country in his two-week tour. The international aid would be used to develop additional water resources, increase crop acreage and ouild food-storage facilities. "Traditional aid levels and methods will not be enough," Mr. Kissinger said. "Nor can any one country or any single donor provide the resources necessary to meet the critical, inng-term needs" of the narched sub-Sahara region known as the Sanel. [Page 1, Column 8.]

China'a secior leaders made an unusual appearance together on television at a May Day celebration in what was believed to be an effort to demonstrate unity despite the country's current bitter political campaign. Breaking with the usual custom of following strict party rank, the leaders were shown with members of the so-called "radical" faction seated next to other officials who are usually identified with the so-called 'moderates," [1:4.]

Peru's image as a model for development in Latin America has been tarnished by severe economic setbacks, eroding the confidence of Persisian military officers in the leftist ravolution they proclaimed in 1968. The Peruvian experiment which greatly expanded the role of the state in the economy while carrying out social and economic re forms aimed at the poorer sectors attracted a great deal of ettention as an alternative to the right-wing course taken by Brazil and most South American countries. Peru's military leaders are facing their most serious problem to date — bow to attract the nuge amounts of private capital needed to overcome the economic crisis while not turning away from their revolutionary program. [1:6-7.]

The center of Lisbon was rocked by a bomb that went off outside a Communist Party office, killing one person and injuring six others. The explosion also damaged half a dozeo other cars and shatterad windows of hotels, movie theaters, shops and office buildings on the Avenida da Liberdade. A Communist Party spokesman said "the ter-rorist attack was obviously aimed at the Communist Party." A few hours before the explosion, the Communist Party leader, Alvaro Cunhal, warned that "reactionary forces are seeking to destabilize" Portugal's politi-cal situation. [1:5.]

Many Democrats joined the long lines at Republican polling places in Houston and Dallas and other sittes where Houston and Dalias and other cities where Democrais have been dominant. The Democratic vote was said to be heavy to moderate. Mr. Reagan needs a big victory in Texas to start what he hopes will be a string of primary victories across the Suobelt states. [1:1.]

The Socialists, who made the best showing in the election, winning 35 percent of the vote, have insisted that they will form a minority government withour alliances either with the Communists or with parties right of the Socialists.

The Socialist leader, Mario of Soares, rejects alliance with the Communists on the ground that theirs is not a democratic party, and he rejects alliance with the centrist Popular Democrats or the conservative Social Democratic Center because "this would put labor against."

Madrid Communists Hold May Day Rally With 2,000 in Park

MADRID. May I—The outawed Spanish Communist Party succeeded today in massing more than 2,000 people in a park clearing outside Madrid in defiance of a ban on demonstrations observing the May Day holiday.

A family outing was turned into one of the biggest political rallies the Communists have ever succeeded in staging since the civi war and the police looked on without interfering. In contrast. Barcelona. Spain's second largest city, was the scene of street battles that went on for four hours as Communist and other illega labor forces took advantage of May Day to assert their claims to freedom. A West German television team was arrested and detained for several hours.

Since yesterday, incidents in Madrid, Barcelona, Valencia, Zaracoza and other cities have pointed up two of the major issues confronting Spain's Government—how to answer labor's demands for free trade unions and how to exclude the Communists while other opposition groups are being accepted into reformed parliamentary and labor systems.

PARIS COMMUNIST SEEKS WIDER BASE

Marchais Presses Drive for Support by the Gaullists and Roman Catholics

By JAMES F. CLARITY

PARIS, May 1—The French Communist Party is accelerating its efforts to gain political support among millions of Frenchmen who have been traditionally anti-Communist for political or religious reasons.

The stepped-up campaign, following the decisions approved at the party's 22d congress here in February, is being stimuated by the party leader, Georges Marchais, despite some opposition within the party. The opposition—mostly old-line Communist intellectuals—feels that the new campaign could push the party to the political right.

Mr. Marchais is directing the party's specific new actions. designed to win support among Gaullist party vnters and practicing Roman Catholics, two hroad groups that do not necessarily overlap in the French political spectrum.

He has made it no secret that his objective is to gain votes for the left, particularly his own oarty, in next spring's municipal elections and in the 1978

Parliament elections.
Since 1947, when the Communists were last in a French government, the parly has controlled a steady 20 percent of the French electorate. The Socialist Party, now the partner in the left opposition, controls about 30 percent.

about 30 percent.
In the last two weeks, the Communists have indicated that they are re-evaluating their steadfast opposition to France's strategic nuclear strike force. This re-evaluation was confirmed by Mr. Marchais in a television interview Thursday night. The general secretary said that his party was reviewing all the elements of France's defense structure and promised to say more on the subject "when the time comes."

The Nuclear Questinn
Diplomath: analysts pointed out that Mr. Marchais, who is fond of quoting the Communist-Socialist electoral agreement platform, did not mention that the platform hluntly demands renunciation of the nuclear force and the immediate conversion of the nuclear-arms industry to peaceful nuclear purposes. Specifically, Mr. Marchais declined to comment on what his party, or the leftist coalition, would do with French submarines now capabable of launching nuclear missiles. The Communists' apparent shift is being widely interpreted by analysts and the Defense Ministry as a tactic to gain favor among Gaullists, who consider the nuclear force, started by de Gaulle, vital.

In a move to impress Catholics, the party sent Roland Leroy, the director of its newspaper, Humanité, to Marseilles to see Archbishop Roger Etchegaray a month ago. During the television interview, Mr. Marchais said, "We have relations with the men of the church, and these relations are normal."

these relations are normal."
Noting that he had made his First Communion as a Catholic youth, Mr. Marchais said he later became an athelst, "But Christians, like atheists." the leader said, "are suffering the consequences of the present feconomic and social] crisis.
They have common interests.
Mr. Marchais has also begun to defend himself and his party

Mr. Marchais has also begun to defend himself and his party against recent criticism by President Valéry Giscard d'Éstaing and members of the President's right-center Government and Parliament majority. His defense has been taking the form of attacks and statements, in which sometimes sounds almost as Gaullist or nationalist as did General de Gaulle.

Mr. Marchals continues to insist that the decision of the party congress to denounce a sacred Communist doctrine, the dictatorship of the prolelariat, was not a political tactic, but a coofirmation of the evolution of thinking within the party. Conversations with Communists in various parts of the country since the congress in February indicate that the rank and file agrees with Mr. Marthelais.

Dissent at Seminar

"The opposition is mostly from a few intellectuals." said André Duroméa, the Communist mayor of Le Havre, who is also a deputy in Parliameot. While Mr. Duroméa's remark seems to reflect that of the party faithful, dissent arose last week at a Communist seminar when Louis Althusser, the Communist writer and philosopher, said the denunciation of the lictatorship doctrine amounted to "throwing the baby out with the bathwater." He warned that the result could move the party toward the right.

Mr. Marchais disagreed, and noted that technically the abanjonment of the doctrine still and to be formally approved by he next scheduled party con-

The official attitude of the narty, which has a new slogan, 'Communism under French colors," was emphasized by Mr. Aerchais in the interview, when the was asked about the recent statement by Mr. Giscard d'Esaing that France could not onger consider itself a supersower. Mr. Marchais's from was distinctly nationalist-Gaullist chee he said: "I am in formal lisagreement with the statements of Giscard d'Estaing. # ATHENS DIPLOMACY STIRS CRITICISM

Efforts for Accords Arouse Mixed Reactions Abroad and Opposition at Home

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times ATHENS, May I-Greece's recent moves to forge new agreements with the United States and Turkev have set off a debate over this country's foreign policy and illumioated sharp divisions between the Government of Prime Minister Constantine Caramanlis and his leading opponents.

Athens has also received mixed reactions from Washington and Ankara. But a few voices on both sides of the Aegean are now arguing that Greece and Turkey should make a concerted effort to recoocile the disputes that have crippled the southern wing of the North Atlantic Treaty Orga-

The current diplomatic flurry began in March, wheo the Ford Administration agreed to give Turkey more than $1 billion in aid over four years to return for a reopening of American bases. Turkey had sought the long-term pact after Congress had imposed an arms embargo last year in a vain attempt to soften Ankara's position on the Cyprus issue.

Mr. Caramanlis sought a similar deal, and Washington agreed to give Athens $700 million over four years in return for continued use of four military facilities in Greece. Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel of Turkey then accused Greece of harboring aggressive intentions against Anatolia, and Mr. Caramanlis responded by proposing a nonaggression pact.

Belongs to the West

In defending the agreement with Washington, Mr. Caramanlis has argued that Greece belongs to the Western world. Its security depends on NATO guarantees, he said, and its economic prosperity depends on integration with the European' Economic Community.

George Mayros, the leader of the Center Union, a social democratic party, termed the agree-ment with Washington a "dangerous adventure" and said that if Grece became reconciler with Washington, it would be "completely disarmed" in its struggle with Turkey.

Andreas Papandreou, the socialist leader, said that the agreement spelled the end of Greek independence from Washington and would undermine all efforts to create a neutral zone in the Balkans "outside the cold war military considerations.`

Mr. Caramanlis insisted that hew as following an independent" foreign policy but added:
"We should distinguish tween nonaligned and an inde-pendent policy." Not even the Communist parties in Italy and France, he noted, advocated the withdrawal of their countries from the Western alliance.

American Trap Charged

Some of his opponents said that Mr. Caramanlis had fallen into an American trap and that the Greek agreement was de-signed mainly to facilitate ap-proval of the Turkish accord in Congress. Some members of the "Grek lobby" in Washing-ton have voiced similar sentiments and have called for rejection of both deals.

Mr. Caramanlis said that he would not mind rejection of both agreements, since his main concern was maintaining the balance of power with Turkey. But he also acknowledged that if Congress did turn down the Turkish agreement, new and harmful tensions could be created in the region.

In proposing the nonaggres sion pact with Turkey, the Prime Minister was trying to score a propaganda victory and reduce war fever here. In additioo, diplomats here believe, he genuinely wants to promote a spirit of déteote in the Acgean and is willing to take political risks to do it

The opposition here has at tacked Mr. Caramanlis as being "soft on Turkey." Mr. Mavros declared that Greece would never accept the Turkish occur pation of Cyprus, and Mr. Papandreou insisted that there was no room for negotiation on disputes in the Aegean.

Demirel Receptive

In Ankara, Prime Minister Demirel reacted vaguely but favorably to the nonaggression proposal and was immediately criticized as being "soft on Greece." His opponents said that such a pact would remove Turkey's deterrent power in the Aegean and freeze the status quo in favor of Greece.

Still, several leading Turkish newspapers praised Mr. Cara-manlis for his initiative and realism. The Istanbul daily Milliyet said: "The two countries are eogaged in escalation of hostility as well as a very costly arms race. It is imperative, therefore, that the problems underlying this state of affairs be removed as soon as possible."

What is needed between the Iwn countries, one Western analyst said, is a "psychological hreakthrough." a realization in: both capitals that reconciliation would he mutually heneficial. Such a breakthrough appears to be a long way off, but diplomats here hope that a start has been made.

Electronic Post Expenses $25 Million in Fiscal '76

WASHINGTON, May 1 (UPI)

The American-manned Sinai early-warning system has been operating effectively for two months with less staff than expected but at more than double the expected first-year cost, the Administration reported yesterday.

The first progress report on the electronic surveillance system between Egyptian and Israeli lines said "no untoward incidents have occurred" since the sensor fields and three United States watch stations began operation late in February.

Last October Congress authorized the use of 200 American civilians to man the monitoring system as part of last September's Egyptian Israeli military redeployment agreement negotiated by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

In the first of the reports that Congress requires every six months, the Sinai mission director, C. William Kontos, said that only 174 Americans would be needed to run the system once final construction of permanent buildings has been completed.

Initial Cost Estimates

"In fact, there will rarely be more than 150 Americans present in the Sinai at one time," Mr. Kootos said. The report noted that the Government had previously estimated that the system would cost about $10 million to start up in fiscal year 1975 and $10 million a year to operate after that.

It said these "rough estimates" had been "redefined" into current cost estimates of $25 million in fiscal 1976 start-up money, $5 million for the three-month transition period to the new fiscal year system and $15 million annual operation costs thereafter.

In a covering letter, President Ford said the Sinai monitoring system "is an important investment in peace."

Mr. Kontos assured Congress that the Administration had bonored Congressional requirements that no intelligence agents be assigned to the monitoring system.

.In a apeech to the nation, the general said his eight-month-old government was not weak and for that reason could allow political opposition within the Peruvian revolution.

It was not immediately known how many people would be given their freedom and political rights under the amnesty.

owners of small farms to his son and son-in-law to share their fruit orchards with help him run the orchard for them.

Land, Not Subsidies

"He told us that we would receive Government loans and subsidies," said Victor Ramos, who owns a 20-acre orchard. "We told him we just wanted to keep our land and that we did not want to see him here again. The Government has not sent anybody back since then." A few miles away, David Ramos, no relation to Victor, recently moved 10 Indians and their families off his 40-acre orchard after they had tried to take it over while he was ill.

Mr. Ramos said he was certain that agrarian reform officials had been behind the attempt, and he brought in landless peasants working while he recovered from a prostate operation.

His former Indian workers have probably moved on to Lime to jok swelling runks of jobless and underemployed.

The rural migration to the capital has almost doubled Lima's population in the last seven years. About a third of the four million residents live in mudbrick slums that creep up on the outskirts and blend into the stark brown hills.

The agrarian reform has neither stemmed this migration nor has it been able to cover a growing food deficit. Agrarian production registered no growth last year, while the population kept up its more than 3 percent annual increase.

Blacks' Anger Rising in South Boston as Violence Over Schools Sprea

Special to The New York Time

BOSTON, April 30-The longer they talked, the more the 10 black Hyde Park high School students seated around a long table showed their anger.

Finally, Leon Rock, a worker with the Youth Activities Commission, went around the table asking each student what she wanted to do at school the next day. "Get whitey," they answered one by one.

The emergency meeting with community workers yesterday followed stonethrowing fights between black and white students at Hyde Park in the morning that closed the school after a bomb scare, and the stoning of cars by blacks on Blue Hills Avenue in the after-noon. Now, the students were talking over the prob-lems and making plans to ease tension—a process students and adults had been through many times and many were weary of.

The day's events were a mirror to the turmoil this racially divided city has faced the last two years over desegregation of schools in the white sections of Hyde Park, Charlestowo and South Bos-

In the past, protest demon-strations and violence have generally been by whites against blacks, and have provoked only sporadic reaction by stone-throwing blacks. But that has changed the last two weeks as blacks have increased their attacks, and there is concern that, if the attacks are not checked, Bos-ton might become a racial

Mayor Voices Concern

'There is a change coming on as a result of the past two weeks," said Mayor Kevin H. White. The change would be either for the better or worse. I don't know which

One change is that older blacks now express an anger they previously tried hard to contain. They preached re-straint to students and other young blacks, urging them not th retaliate. But last night, adults held two meetings to talk ahout the change. At one, called by black Massachusetts legislators, the concern was with organizing to be more effective and seeking adequate protection of their community. The other meeting was much more militant in tone, with such matters as "urban warfare" and "perimeter defense of the community" being discussed.

Thus, adults are finding it more difficult to restrain the emotion that has built up in the community. William Wimberly, an administrator with the Young Meo's Christian Association who is ac-tive in a citywide parents group, said he did not use the term "cool it" to young people any more.

Yet despite the emotion, blacks are still trying to "cool it." Last night, which turned out to be quiet, car-

As "outsiders," they feel they are not part of the familiar relationship existing among residents, teachers, principals and even police-men, who line the hallways of the schools in such areas as South Boston and Charles-

"The police know all the white kids," said Beverly Merritt, of Charlestown High

"They greet the white kids and ask how the folks are doing. The 26-year-old native of Connecticut entered the academy in 1974 as a second-semester sophomore. She already had graduated from the University of Vermont as a chemistry major and decided to come to the Maine academy because of her lifelong interest in sailing.

Miss Deane had piloted yachts up and down the East Coast for two summers after she graduated from Vermont, and before she arrived here. "That was what I was interested in, and I thought to myself, "Why not go all the way?" she said.

"It wasn't my intention to he the top of the class. I was interested in the work, and I don't see the point of doing anything unless you do it right," said Miss Doane.

Although she went through her studies without difficulty, she felt that it was a little more difficult breaking through social barriers.

"I was certainly put in the limelight by the school. There was a lot of publicity that wasn't necessary and I can sympathize with the feelings of some of my classmates. # Body Language Spoken Here

But with a slight French accent, because this-idea is from Pier Augé of Paris.

And it makes perfect sense. Why on earth should you treat your face to creams, lotions and potions and then let the rest of your body fend for itself?

Especially now that it's swimsuit season.
The better part of you is open to view, and we've lined up some "body experts" to be on the scene this week with personal advice for your own body beautiful.

But, nowhere in the lexicon of body language is there such a sentence as "You can eat whatever you want and you never have to exercise." That's why when you buy your Pier Augé body treatments, we'll give you a nice little bonus that will help your slimming-and-trimming campaign.

Your bonus, (now through May 31st.)
the Pier Augé Calorie Calculator, will tell you at a glance how many calories you take in, plus the number of calories you

State and Local Governments Challenge Social Security System

We are in the process of organizing a task force to study the opportunities, and to develop specific recommendations. Mr. Axelson continued. This will include analysis of the disability benefits that will be caused by withdrawal from Social Security and an analysis of the cost of substitute benefits. While New York is still making up its mind, the question has already been settled for a growing number of cities and other governmental units.

In the last two years, 232 units of 454,000 workers have amounced their intention to withdraw or have withdrawn injected into wells include forcim acid.

Vincent D. McDonnell, chairman of the State Mediction Board, called negotiators for apartment house employees and the Realty Advisory Board on Labor Relations to a meeting at 11 A.M. today at the Belmont Plaza Hotel in an effective control of the second ened for Tuesday.

Both Local 32-B of the Serv ice Employees Union, which represents 20,000 workers in 4000 apartment houses in Manhattan, Queens, Brooklyn and Staten Island, and the landlord group have reported an impasse in negotiations and have warned of a strike. The employees are seeking a $50-a-

The study was made by the Washington consulting firm of Ruttenherg, Friedman, Kilgallon, Gutchess and Associates. lon, Gutchess and Associates.

ing list of those considered was narrowed to three: Dr. Woolf, Dr. Roland M. Frye, a professor of English at the University of Pennsylvania, and Dr. Rohert F. Goheeo, president of Princton University from 1957-72 and since then chairman of the Council on Founda-

Prof. Lyman Spitzer Jr. of Princeton, an astronomer, had asked that his name be with-drawn from consideration.

To be director of the institute is to hold precarious sway over a group of talented scholars preoecessors at the school included such world fi-gures as Albert Einstein, Her-mann Weyl, John von Neumann, Erwin Panofsky and J., Robert Oppenheimer, Dr. Op-cenheimer was the institute's, third director.

For its director, the institute traditionally seeks a candidate of substantial scholarly othievement and a medicum of administrative ability.

"One of the many candidates way supposed to be a specialist in something called manager, ment science," noted an institute professor, "and the general, common of the faculty was that, he should be moved to the bot-tage of the Fer.

Andre Well, a mathematiciae and professor at the institute, said that social science's addition was an example of businessman's tile, trustees't belief in diversification.

"It's just enrich and diversi-ty." he said. "It's just a lutle appendix to the institute, which did not need it and cannot af-

In addition to those in the highest sphere (active faculty), here are about 16 professors emeriti and members with longterm appointments. In addition, each year there are well over a hundred visiting scholars, almost invariably postdoctoral.

No Specific Duties

Professors and other scholars at the institute have no specified duties, no classes or stu-dents, and—as recent history indicates-little intention of compromising their own notions of what a great institution of learning should be.

Assuming that the trustees and Dr. Woolf agree on the terms of his appointment, his duties at the institute will plainly include that of restoring harmony to a faculty split in the wake of the Bellah case.

But the history of science,
Dr. Woolf's forte, has many examples of warring camps and rival coteries, so the challenges of office will not be entirely unfamiliar. The institute has had to adopt a policy of austerity in the last few years, and one result is that faculty salaries—$40,000 a year-are no longer far above the academic average. To one who has been serving as a university administrator — Dr. Woolf, for example—this, too. is hardly strange terrain.

A Brooklyn Birthplace Dr. Woolf was born in Brooklyn on Aug. 12, 1923. After three years in the Army during World War II, he got his Bachefor of Science and master's degrees from the University of Chicago, and his doctorale (in physics) from Cornell in 1955. He taught at Boston University, Brandeis University and the University of Washington before going to Johns Hopkins in 1961 to occupy the first en-dowed chair for the teaching of the history of science. His appointment as provost came in 1972.

He is author of 'The Transits nf Venus" and editor of books on science history, including a series called "The Sources of Science." His wife, Patricia A. Kelsh, is a professor at Johns Hopkins, involved in nuclear chemistry and psychology.

Johns Hopkins, opened in 1876, and the institute, opened in 1930, were both endowed by Baltimoreans. The institute is an independent establishment, not a part of Princeton University. Three of the four people who survived the preliminaries in the search for institute director earned degrees from Princeton University.

American War.

By JONATHAN FRIENDLY

College freshmen know as much American history overall as dio their counterparts 33 years ago, although the content of what they know has shifted somewbat, An analysis suggests that if the students who took a New York Times American history test in 1943 had no better than the current freshmen did. The results of the two tests canoot be compared directly, because much of the data from the first is no longer available, and it is impossible to say how that sample of students at 36 campuses compared to all freshmen then. The nature of student bodies has changed in the last three decades, first under pressure from returning World War II veterans, later with the proliferation of community colleges and such practices as opeo

The new test, however, repeated three items from the 1943 test. The students were asked to write down: the names of the Presidents during five wars and to arrange two sets of four events in chronological order.

The ability to identify Lincoln as the Civil War President has increased, with 82 percent of the current freshmen correct on the item, compared with 75 percent in 1943. On the other band, 70 percent of studeots in 1943 knew Wilson was President during World War I, compared with 49 percent now.

Both groups had almost identical scores on the three other war Presidents-13 percent for James Madlson in the War of 1812 and for James K. Polk in the Mexican War; 16 percent for William McKinley in the Spanish-

Service reform (1883), the War with Spain (1898) and the inauguration of Theodore Roosevelt (1901). Only 3.5 percent of the present students got all four in order, But today's students outscored their predecessors, 7.3 percent to 6 percent, on the other chronology item, which iovolved the Nullification Act (1832), the Mexican War (1846), the Compromise of 1850 (dealing with slavery), and the Dred Scott decision (1857). Some of the new questions touched on themes from the earlier examination, but strict comparisons are risky because the new test required students to recognize answers in multiple-choice formst, while the earlier test required students to recall answers to fill in the blanks. Forty-four percent of the students in 1943 were able to name two of the powers the Constitution specifically grants to Congress; 26 percent of today's freshmen recognized the regulation of interstate commerce as being one of those powers. And, on a topic that illustrated a basic difference the kind of knowledge the two tests tried to measure, 35 percent of the current students correctly identified the aim of the Open Door policy; io 1943, just 15 percent of the students knew that the title of the policy was

History Test Answers

Following are answers to Question 1 through 24 on the New York Times American History lest on the preceeding page. The correct answer is marked by an asterisk (*), and the numbers show the percentage of students choosing each option.

B. 78° C. 5 D, 2

(A) is wrong because the French and Spanish were as aware as the British of the economic potential and, in fact, acted earlier to exploit it. Only students who scored low generally missed this question.

B. 38 C. 35* D. 11 A-16

Students choosing (B) did not realize that Puritans insisted on religious conformity. Some very good students choose (A), correctly identifying Roger Williams with religious liberty but overestimating his impact.

A.56* B.7C. 31

Protection of property, the most popular wrong answer (C), was commonly cited, with life and liberty, as an 18th Century right, but Jefferson used 'pursuit of happiness" because he thought Europeans would be more likely to sympathize with it.

D. 28* B. 48 C, 16

(B) the power to declare Congressional acts unconatitutional was never given to the courts directly. The Supreme Court first asserted this authority in its 1803 decision in Marbury v. Madison.

> D.59° A.10 C.7 B.24

As in most questions on diplomacy, male students did better than females (66% to 51%). Commercial treaties negotiated shortly after the Monroe Doctrine provided that the United States be put on a par with Latin America's other trading partners.

C. 22 A,41* B. 11

Black students, who generally did not perform as well as whites in the test, did about as well as whites (39% to 42%) in knowing that Jacksonian Democrats were not characteristically hostile to slavery. Students in the political middle outscored students

On these four related questions, students overwhelmingly knew the purchase of Louisiana and Alaska, but had difficulty with the other means of territorial expansion. Students tended to confuse territories added by annexation, such as Texas, with those acquired by war or the threat of seizure, such as the Mexican Cession that included California.

B. 58* C. 31

Although (C), the most popular wrong answer, was what the abolitionists wanted, Lincoln's policy was to contain slavery. The question differentiated sharply between the most able students and the least able. It was answered correctly by 82% of the top scoring third of the students compared to 39% of the lowest third, a greater than average spread hetween the two groups.

(B), which drew the most responses and attracted a large number of the best students, reflects a common myth. The post Civil War corruption in the North was as had as the South's; the carpetbaggers were not entrenched hut rather were turned out of office in most southern states before the end of Reconstruction; and blacks achieved a short-lived majority in only one state legislature, South Carolinas'.

Students lended to know when the people who populated their region of the country had arrived. Westerners outscored all others, 57 to 49%, on the Mexican immigrants (20); 54% of the Easterners were right on Southern and Eastern Europeans (19) compared to 43% of Southerners, and Midwestern students scored 49% to 41% for others on the Germans and Irish (18). Blacks did essentially as well as whites on when the slaves were brought in (17). One major misconception was that large numbers of Southern and Eastern Europeans continued to arrive after World War I.

More than the usual number of students (17%) simply skipped this question which required fairly detailed knowledge as well as a sense of chronology. (A) Refers to an issue in the 1920's, and (B) and (D) to issues in the 1930's. Eastern students did better (66%) than those in other regions.

B. 9 C.13 The most popular wrong answers, (C) and (D), did not happen, although there was an antitrust compaign late in the New Deal. Students on the political left were more apt (67%) to get this right, as were students who said their high school courses had emphasized conceptual approaches to history (69%).

23. A.68* B. 11 C. 8

As in other diplomatic questions, men outscored women, 73% to 62%; whites outscored blacks 70% to 47% and students on the political right or left outscored those in the middle 70% to 66%.

A.10 B. 69* C. 9 D. 11 The phrase "all deliberate apeed" did not even oc-

Tennis Is Making a Comeback on the Cruise Liners

By WERNER BAMBERGER

Tennis at sea, in vogue on a few large trans-Atlantic liners in the late twenties and thirties, is making a comeback aboard cruise ships sailing out of New York.

Recognizing the growing popularity of the game. Flagship Cruises and Home Lines have made tennis facilities available on two liners, the Kungsholm and the Doric. In addition, the lines provide tennis lessoos at sea and arrange for play ashore at ports of call.

The Kungsholm now boasts Royale Court with net. a 12-by-60-foot playing surface, manufactured by Royale Sports, Atlanta. It is situated aft on the liner's promenade deck. The court is enclosed with nylon netting at the sides to keep double bounces from going overboard.

It measures slightly less than half of a regulation singles court, which is 27 by 78 feet, but it is the closest to a full-size shipboard tennis

The four prewar liners that were equipped with tennis courts were the Ile de France,

Festival Gives Youths Chance on Stage

theater will have a moothlong opportunity to learn and to perform during the second citywide Youth Theater Festival, which started yesterday. The festival will include more than 100 free performances, workshops and discussion groups in theaters, public libraries, schools, community ceoters and museums in all five horoughs. Sponsored by the Department of Cultural Affairs and the New York Public Library's Office of Young Adult Servces, the festival is open to anyone, but is aimed primarily at 13 to 19 year

"There are not enough opportunities for teen-agers to become involved in the arts," explained Andora Hodgio of the Aodora Hodgin Total Theater, which is producing the festival.

"There are hundreds of things going on, but teen-agers doo't know how to connect with them-how to get the experience and training that they oeed."

For example, R. Anthony Prescott of Manhattan, who just turned 17, always wanted to sing, dance and espe-cially to act, but until last year's festival, "it was like having a dream and there's oo one to tell it to that would make a difference." New People and Programs

At the festival he attended workshops, met new people and eventually joined a special program for students in-terested in the arts, at Julia Richman High School. "The Richman High School. "The festival made the difference." he said. "I think very much that I'm on my way. That's my feeling inside."

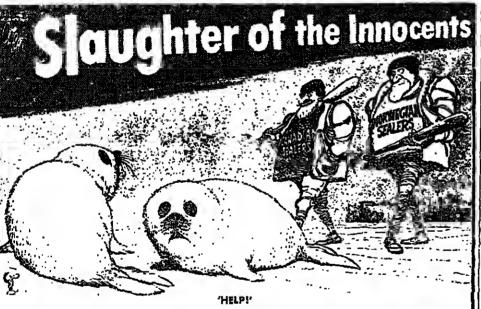

The festival opened with a tecture-discussion at noon at the Donnell Library Center additioning 20 Pact 524

ter auditorium, 20 West 53d Street, by Dr. Nellie McCas-lin, a New York University professor, whose specialty is theater for young people.

Festival aides—who stress the multi-ethnic character of the festivs!—called attention

Minnesota Bans Phosphates ROSEVILLE, Minn., May 1 AP)—The Minnesota Pollution Control Agency board has voted to ban the use of household phosphate detergents as of next Jan. 1. The action Tuesday makes Minnesota the third state to ban household use of phosphates in an attempt to slow algae growth in lakes and rivers. Bans are also in effect in Indiana and New York.

Seal Protector faces Prison — Your Help is Needed

In spite of increasing scientific evidence, that the horp seals are moving toward extinction, (Notianal Geographic, Jon. 1976), — the harp seal hunt on the Labrador Front was on again this spring. Helpless boby seals ance more were beaten to death to satisfy a high fashian market in luxury fur and leather.

Jim Gallagher reparted in the Detrait Free Press, 3-28-76, "The oir is full of their nervous bleating, "me-me-me" they cry to their mathers." Sealers move among the newborn pups, crushing their tiny skulls with wooden clubs and stripping them af their pelts. Two sealers watch on infant nursing ot it's mothers side. "It's last meal" says one. They woit until the pup has it's fill — beat the mother away from her boby then—whash, whash, whash—three blows of the club and the skull of the infant is a bloody pulp. The skinning commences — o helpless mother seol watches.

Piloting the IFAW Jet Ronger, our Director, Brion Davies, was able to reach the hunt, on the remote ice pack off the caast of Labrador, and to take newsmen from the United States, Conodo and Eurape for o first hand laok ot the sloughter.

Canadian officials attempted to block the International Fund for Animal Welfare's helicapter and with their aircraft engaged Brian in dangerous aerial maneuvers. Eventually, a farce of armed Canadian afficials seized the IFAW helicapter and charged Brian with violation of Canadian seal protection regulations. These regulations forbid an aircraft from landing within one-half mile of a seal. Imagine if you can, anything more ludicrous than a low which pretends to protect seals from the disturbance of harmless aircroft while poid killers are beating them to death

If found guilty, Brian Davies faces a stiff fine and a maximum sentence of 1 year in jail — these are the weapons the Canadian Government uses to crush those wha try to protect these helpless animals.

Will you foin in helping to defend Brian against a grossly unjust charge so that he may continue his untiring bottle against the farces of a wealthy sealing industry whose greed extends to the last baby seal.

Progress is being made. Through campaigns led by the IFAW, the cammercial harp seal hunt in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence was stopped in 1972 and this year the quata of horp seals to be killed was reduced from 150,000 to 130,000. There is a long way to go but 20,000 boby seals will be alive this year because people like you cared enough to jain the fight.

Balanchine Completes Work by Adding Two Dances to 'Emeralds' Section

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

Everyone can use words to write, but not everyone can write like a genius. In dance, the genius of George Balanchine lies not only in the fact that he has expended the ballet vocabulary itself, but also in the new ways in length. They were either too which he has used the idiom of classical ballet as it > existed before him. Nowbere do these two aspects of hia creativity come together so clearly as in "Jewels," which the New York City Ballet presented so exuberantly Friday night at the New York State Theeter. It is a ballet that bas always been a public and critical success since its pre-miere in 1967, and last Friday, Balanchine "completed" it by adding two new dances to the first section, called Verdy's ever commanding solo, Susan Hendl's lyrical variation and the pas de trois danced by Victor Castelli, Susan Pilarre and Heather Watts. If anything, the new duet recapitulates the walking theme that imbues sn much of the other cbore-

Totally in tune with the opening duet, it has the same stress on back-to-back partnering. But its progression ia more direct. Mias Verdy and Mr. Blum enter from opposite wings. They leave by walking backward, she leaning quietly against his side. It is a pas de deux one yearna to see egain, especially when it is better rehearsed.

The true walking theme is atated in a succeeding duet, denced beautifully by Miss Hendl and Nolan T'Sani. The former finale is now followed by a new pas de sept for all the principals, to the remain-ing "Pelléas" music. Again, there is the air of the promenade, but there are new chain formations and palterns. But nothing is more startling than the last noble image. The four women leave, the three men drop to

Gospel Overtones To His Repertory

Ray Charles's recent transformation of "America the Beautiful" into a gospel moan is the latest in the series of transformations that has constituted his remarkable career He began during the early 1950's by putting secular words to sacred music and, in the process, opening the way for succeeding geoerations of gospel-rooted rhythm and blues and rock-and-roll singers. During the early 60's, he applied his church-based style to country and Western music. This last transformation was master stroke, for it united the two great strains of Ameri-can populist, music, black and white. Mr. Charles has gravitated more and more toward pop and jazz material during the last decade, but he has never lost sight of his original mis-

Mr. Charles's Friday evening concert at Carnegie Hall began with a smooth, elegant jazz set by his big band, picked up steam when Mr. Charles came on to sing a few early hits, and reached a level of unmatched artistry when the singer and his star soloist, Johnny Coles, engaged in a meditation upon the pop evergreen "Am I Blue." Mr. Charles's wordleas vocal improvising spanned several octaves and achieved the sort of crying intensity of which hel chimes accompany is still the master, and Mr. Coles very nearly matched him with tulli Carmina" has four a flugeihorn solo of telling elo-i pianos and a lot of percus-

One manufacturer said that 21 shirts "I would venture to say that lo this were required to cover the spectrum of country, three years down the ilne, 85 percent of the men's dress shirts sold in this country are going to be average-sleeve-lengths," said Joseph B. Shirts in exact sleeve length remain

Mr. Zimmerman works for a concern that manufactures suspender clips and garter clips. As yet, there is no indica-tion that the sleeve garter is coming back, But Abraham Boxer & Sons, of 134 West 26th Street, says it manufactures them as a novelty item. For those who feel that the passing

But out of this dingy loft is coming a kind of beauty that the Etruscans, the Byzantines and ancient Greeks ooce knew. The place is the Kulicke-Stark Academy of Jewelry Art on Broadway near 79th Street, and in it 210 men and women—divided among morning, afternoon or evening classes — are learning the Byzantine technique of cloisonné, the Roman method of setting stones and the Etruscan method of granulating gold.

Put Out Flames

"We're teaching techniques that are not available any-where else," said Robert Ku-licke the Other day, after he had told Hazel Sweeney how much to beat a pitch pot in which to pound silver ioto the desired shape. "You don't set it on fire," he said. "You only warm it."

Meanwhile, Mr. Kulicke's wife, Jean Stark, was showing Iris Tannian how to paint an apple for three-dimeosional cloisonne. "We teach by demonstrations," said Miss Stark, "and so each student always starts with two identical objects, one for us to use to show how it's done."

After Miss Stark had applied paint to the miniature apple with Iris Tannian watching intently, she moved on to someone else who was ready to be helped and Miss Tannian hegan working on the other apple. In another part of the loft, amid the screech of grinding wheels, thud of hammers and blue flames of soldering torches, one of the teachers, Peter Sentkowski, was explaining to one of the students how he'd designed a oecklace that shows phases of the earth as they appear

What Jean Stark likes to think the Academy of Jewelry Art is doing is translating ancient techniques into 20th-century ones. "For instance, the electronics industry makes granules for soldering, and we can use them for granulatiog, which makes process much easier and

Will Lerner's New Musical Sing?

Warren Hoge is a staff reporter for The Times.

In the book and lyrics for his new musical, however, first collaboration with Leonard Bernstein entitled "1600 Pennsylvania Avenue" which opens at the Mark Hellinger Tuesday, Mr. Ler-ner has addressed himself to the haves and have-nots of a more ambiguous world, one closer to home than Camelot, and the words have come harder. And in the months of rewriting and restructuring the beleaguered musical, the seemingly ideal union of Mr. Lerner and Mr. Bernstein has faitered, new directors have been installed, the entire structure of the show has been razed and the book has been largely overhauled. A particular source of difficulty has been Mr. Lerner's presentation of hlacks and whites in the passage of the 100 years of American history that the show records.

The narrative Mr. Lerner put together begins with George Washington's proposal to build the White House (the cornerstone was laid in 1792 while he was still President) and employs an "Upstairs, Downstairs" format to carry the story to 1900. On tha upstairs level we follow the century through the lives of the Presidents; the downstairs view we get through the fictional hlack servants who minded tha Executive Mansion during that period.

Conceived by Mr. Lerner in 1972 when he says he was "depressed" hy the na-tional condition, the show continually in the course of its original 3 hour and 45 minute length raked over the raw wounds of white guilt

Bringing Back the Biennale Jim Roche's "Da Snake," a U.S. choice for Venice

By GRACE GLUECK

"I've already booked room at Cipriani's, and I'll see you at Harry'a Bar," said a New York art dealer, elated over the news that the Venice Biennale will probably be staged again this year.

Once more, it turns out that reports of the death of the Biennale, oldest and most prestigious of the international survey shows of contemporary art, have been somewhat exaggerated. In 1974 the Biennale, attacked by leftist critics as "elite," shrank into a month-long show of Chilean political posters and street works that didn't look to anyone like an art event. An imminent demise was predicted for the aging institution, not in the best of health anyway.

But this year Italian officials, mindful of the tourists and the prestige that the Biennale brings to Venice, have decided to try reviving it. Though money is scarce and politics in Venice are still running high, they plan once again—at this writing—to stage another version of the grand old supersalon that. since its birth in 1895, has served as an international showcase, style survey, trade mart and information center for the best and the worst in contemporary art.

How to Campaign On TV Without Much Money

On Monday, April 21, at approximately 10:55 P.M. EST. Senator Frank Church performed a neat hit of surgery on CBS's "Medical Cen-ter." The Idaho Senator, who had recently announced his decision to run for President, did not appear as a character in the doctor drama. Instead, he sliced, or rather prompted CBS to slice, close to five minutes of hospital-room dialogue and shots of dripping glucose bottles out of tha script on tois particular evening in order to make way for a paid political commercial in which the Senator appealed for money for his Presidential campaign.

(The CBS network, as well as ABC and NBC, had been trying mightily to avoid selling Church and other Democratic candidates any time during tha Presidential primary races this year.) Second and not so incidentally, it shows how just a few dollars can be parlayed into a hefty campaign bankroil—thanks to the peculiar economics of television and politics in the 1976 Presidential race. Last week, when the company opened its 64th New York season, there was a kind of exuberance about it. There is frequently an exuberance about the company, hut in opening weeks it somehow seems more intense. If you hang around backstage long enough you catch it.

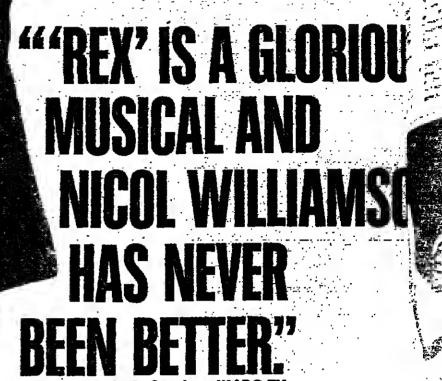

For one thing, there is usually more to talk about backstage during opening weeks. Last week, for example, the talk was about this: Allegra Kent's return to the company to dance "Afternoon of a Fam" with Jacques d'Amboise; eight students from the School of American Ballet moving up to join the corps; six dancers from the corps moving up to become soloists; Peter Schaufuss's old back injury, which was

The Royal Navy quickly took control of the Hudson by sailing right past the poorly manned American shore batteries. This aquatint shows the gallant but fruitless rebel attempt to attack the frightes Phoenix and Rose with fire ships.

You can see their sails, almost catch the glint of the sun on their muskets, in your mind's eye as you stand on the river bank at the beautiful Boscobel Restoration.

This was loyalist country then. And West Point, just the other side of the river, was a rebel garrison. It was there that Benedict Arnold formed his traitorous alliance with British Major Andre and made his escape in the H.M.S. Vulture. A part of one of the chains that stretched from Constitution Island to West Point in an attempt to stop British ships is still visible at Boscobel today.

It's all here, in the Hudson Valley. This Bicentennial year, Boscobel means more than ever to you and your family. Truly the most beautiful Federal home in the New York style, furnished by the world's greatest crafts men, it was completed in 1806 by wealthy landowner and Loyalist States Morris Dyckman.

Today, hostesses welcome you in, sl around, explain the life-style of two centur. And it doesn't take much imagination to yourself at work and play in post-Revolu America. The grounds are 36 acres of fruit gardens, luscious lawns. And the air is tinger with all the drama of American histo: Boscobel. Visit us soon. Bring the family. Boscobel promises to be an experience you'll all remember for a long time to come.

David Rabe's 'House' Is Not A Home

here's a curious locution used frequently toward the eod of David Rabe's "Streamers," together with one unexpected epithet, that no one seems to have called ettention to. The locution and the epithet may both be important in trying to grasp the metaphor

Rabe has been struggling to capture in his ng his constantly promising but thus far fied young career. odd word is 'house," the unexpected one

" listened to Mr. Rabe's play for a second time, . it has been brought from New Haven's Long in the Mitzi E. Newhouse in a tighter, emotionally like Nichols production, I thought I began to see author has been brooding about in the trio udes "The Basic Training of Pavlo Hummel," and Booes" and now "Streamers." I thought I apsed what it was about his subtext that has so en him audience trouble: "Sticks and Bones" regular intermission walkouts and failed on y when Joseph Papp transferred it from his . hough the mass desertion that startled me the 'aw "Streamers" in New Haven now proves

escapes taking place at the Newhouse (just one on opening night). Mr. Rabe has a consistent view of his troubled universe, and, whether that view is right or wrong, there is something intuitively unpalatable to a good many spectators somewhere inside it.

Mr. Rabe's view has nothing to do, really, with the Vietnam War as auch, often as the playwright has used that suicidal folly as background; Vietnsm is, in fact, simply the most readily available background for his purpose. What I think he is saying is simple, simpler than the multiple symbols he keeps offering us to explaio the bloody violence he invariably arrives at. (There are two repeated symbols in "Streamers." One has to do with parachutes that fail to open, the "streamers" of the current title, senselessly dropping men to quite pointless deaths. The other concerns a pit in which a sergeant, during his wartime duty, has trapped a Vietcong he's thrown a grenade into the pit and sat himself heavily on its lid, listening to the victim's mad scramble to free himself of the certain death with which he shares quarters.)

The actual message, if I read it correctly, is this. We are all-black white, straight, queer, parents, children, friends, foes, stable, unstable-living tngether in the same "house." And we can't do it.

We aren't doing it, ever. In "Sticks and Bones" cartoon-strip parents try to make contact with a blinded son home from battle, as the son himself has tried to behave honorably to a Eurasian mistress. Failure all 'round, with the son stitting his wrists, and letting his blood drain into a basin, before the unfeeling family's eyes. In "Streamers," which is beyond question Mr. Rabe's most successful play to date-rich in character nuance, tense in its close-quarter hostilities-three buddies and one interloper reach out to one another in a variety of ways; but the variety is too varied for comfort or safety and, in this smallest of small worlds where adaptation should be feasible, a knife is suddenly drawn to turn the "house" into a slaughterhouse.

While edginess is growing among unalikes, among buman beings thrown together as they must be thrown together if they are to survive a universal loneliness, "Streamers" is taut as a bowstring, provocative as the unfathomable mystery of personality is always provocative. Peter Evans (superb as the homosexual), Paul Rudd (properly ambiguous as the liberal), Terry Alexander (cheerily unaware as the live-and-let-live black), and Dorian Harewood (disturbing, if inexplicable, as Carlyle) perform with energy and sensitive wariness under Mr. Nichols's probing-in-a-snakepit stage direction. Dolph Sweet and Kenneth McMillan are almost equally good as a pair of pot-bellied, past-it drunks, though the dramatic function of these sergeants is questionable: they come on mainly to deliver symbols, and they are a long time about it.

Then, e little better than three-quarters through the play, the blood begins to spurt. We are neither surprised nor shocked that some sort of violence should erupt; we have felt the fuse lighted, the hand grenade tossed into the pit, long before, much more strongly in New York than in New Heveo. What throws us, at first, is that the explosion seems to exceed its own defined boundaries. It isn't confined to the men quarreling over a homosexual act, it extends to at least one total innocent who has played no part in the abrasive contest: a helpless sergeant has his belly slit open simply for good, or bad, measure. The wantonness takes us aback, insults our sense of dramatic coherence.

But that, in turn, forces us to face up to Mr. Rebe's sense of life, of our joint occupancy of the "house." Our attempts to live together in this universe with some chance of ultimate barmony are hopeless. For our flareups are irrational, in excess of any possible motive. We violate one another at random simply because we are here and because we are what we are. We connot coexist. Or so the pits of our stomachs tell us as we sit in

That we canoot coexist, that man cannot make a home of the universe, may be true. It is not a customary dramatic truth. Normally, no matter what ghastly things men and women may be seen doing to one another, we assume a possible rectitude, a natural inner barmony that has been temporarily and intelligibly shattered but restored in a play, but we are permitted to scent its return, accept its existence as e postulate.

Not here. And so, to the degree that we admire the play, to the degree that we believe in it, we despair. We may take a considerable admiration home with us. as I do. But how many of us are willing to make a bedmate

Brecht, Weill and the Birth Of 'The Threepenny Opera'

The chaos of Germany during the 1920's produced a volatile artistic legacy—certainly one of the most expressive and stimulating of modern times. But amid all the cultural landmarks of that period (the Bauhaus, The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," "Wozzeck," and count-less others) "Tha Threepenny Opera" retains a special place.

On an ioternational scale, "The Threepenny Opera" bas probably received more productions than any modern musical play. It was staged in New York in 1933 and again in 1954, when it ran for seven years at the Off Broadway Theater de Lys. It was produced again in 1965, by the New York City Opera. And now, last night, a new version of this avantgarde work which has become an accepted part of our popular culture-immediately familiar and instantly evocative - npened at the Vivian Beaumont.

Most significant works of musical theater are products of long-term collaborations between composers and librettists. "The Threepenny

Gay's plot concerns an elegant and bigamous thies, Captain Macheath, and the world of whores and petty criminals that surrounds him. Macheath, although parently married to at least five women, weds againthis tima to Polly Peachum, tha daughter of an informer who specializes in the sala of stolen goods. Her father, outraged over losing a business asset (his daughter) to another thief, plots to trap-Macheath and manages to have him betrayed inside a brothel. Macheath is arrested and condemned to hang, but is saved by means of a superimposed and purposely artificial happy ending. (As a last note we are told that no matter how absurd the plotting, all operas must end happily.)

All in all, "The Beggar's Opera" is a diverting script. Within a dramatic framework embellished by musical parody (the play sets new lyrics to dozens of folk tunes arranged by a German musicologist) it satirizes an abundance of vulnerable targets. Chief among these are opera, the manners and social vices of the day (a scene in which Macheath keeps two of his "wives" at bay simultaneously was a favorite in its time end the subject of a sketch by Hogarth), and the govern-ment headed by Prime Minister Robert Walpole. Gav's portrait of organized corruption mirrored the political environment, and Macheath's amorous adventures were meant to reflect Walpole's personal life.

Alexander was praised for her brief but intense portrait of a frightened bookkeeper entengled in conspiracy. And now, "The Heiress."

Jane Alexander is enjoying life as, a multi-media queen. In her dressing room several hours before curtain time, the actress kicked off her sandals, put her hare feet up on a spare chair and laughed. Things come up suddenly these days," she said, "but that's all right because I really work better mider pressure. Take 'All the President's Men.' I was in Washington last June, working in a production of Noel Coward's 'Present Laughter' at the Kennedy Center, when I was approached by Alan J. Pakula, the director, and Robert Redford. They asked me if I'd like to play this little role and I said I'd love to. I shot it in four days and then left for California to do 'Eleanor and Franklin.'"

And "The Heiress"? "Well, I was in Hamlet at Lincoln Center last winter, playing Gertrude to Sam Waterston's Hamlet, and Roger Stevens and I had been talking for some time about a play I might do for him. Roger decided to cancel a Kennedy Center production of The New York Idea' and came up with 'The Heiress' as an idea for me. It's too good a role to turn down, so when 'Hamlet closed I went right into renearsing it."

There is, she realizes, a thread of similarity running through some of her recent roles, "All of these women-

Mrs. Roosevelt, tha Watergate bookkeeper, Catherine the heiress have the same problems with shyness, reticence or fear. It seems to be a character-type that I've played a number of times and people seem to cast me for it. It's curious, because a character doesn't appeal to me of itself unless the story develops interestingly."

When she was picked for the role in "Eleanor and Franklin" by the show's producers, David Susskind Associates, she said, her first "audition" was for Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. and author Joseph P. Lash.

"FDR Jr. is the literary executor of his mother's estate," she explained, "and of course it was Joe's book we were dramatizing. So we all met at the Susskind office, where we chatted for about a half an hour, and then FDR Ir. turned and looked right at me and said, Yknow, you don't look like my mother at all, and I thought, Well, that's it.' But then ha sald, There are two things about you that impress me: your eyes, and your sense of presence, which I felt my mother always had. And Joe Lash said, 'Yep,' and then they looked at each other and said, 'Okay with you?' and nodded, and then I burst into tears," she said, bursting into laughter.

The eyes FDR Jr. admired are large and expressive, but they are hazel-brown where-Mrs. Roosevelt's wera blue. And Miss Alexander at 5 feet 6 inches is tall for an actress was listen to tapes of her hut considerably short of the former First Lady's height of 5 feet 11 inches. Obviously there was something elsean occasional glimpse of quick girlishness, perhaps, a flash of emotional intensity. "I must say that when I was doing my research for the role, there were some pictures of the young Eleanor that really had me doing a double take, thinking it was me I was looking at, I went through boxes and boxes of old Roosevelt family snapshots op at Hyde Park-the privata Eleanor, running around in a bathing suit, jumping on a swing, pretending to smoke, having fun. She was not an unattractive woman, but she thought she was.

voice because I'm not good at mimicking people. It was such a strange contrast, a large woman speaking in a very high voice," she said, shifting into the familiar fluting tones of Eleanor Rooseveit. A final touch to her portrait was "a little veneer of six front teeth, bigger than my own, which simply snapped into place." 'Eleanor and Franklin" may win her an Emmy when the TV awards are announced May 17. In any case, she'll cootinue in the role in two sequels now being planned.

First Lady, bookkeeper, fictional spinster—is there an Alexander approach to such disparate roles? "I like to find characters we can look up to, aspire to," she said. One of the first things I did Mrs. Roosevelt was lika that. And the character I play in 'All the President's Men' has that same element of courage that I love. She's a very, very scared person. Her job is at stake. Her sense of morality has been overturned. Possibly her life is in danger. And yet she makes a commitment during that scene and that's why it's a good scene—to divulge what she knows, to help turn the tables. It's on act of courage on her part." The character she plays in "The Heiress" is not, she admits, "somebody ona can look up to, and yet we can learn to respect er once she is jarred out of her submissiveness." Miss Alexander said an important part of her approach to any character is to find its emotional life. She has never formally studied tha Stanislavsky method, but places great faith in the effectiveness of "Stanislavsky's magic if. If this were me, how would I feel? You get as close as possible. I remember reading an interview in which a famous actress said she was able to cry on cue by 'thinking of little kiddles being run over by big trucks.' Well, that's one way of doing it, hut it doesn't work for me. I always have to be going through what the character's going through at the time." The actress doesn't take her art lightly. She's a firm believer in daily voice exercises ("the voice is a muscle, you know, you have to keep it maintained") and once (during a stint in O'Neill's taxing "Mourning Becomes Electra") jogged "a couple of miles a day" to improve her staying power. Recently married for the second time-to Edwin Sherin, who has just staged the musical "Rex" for Broadway and who directed her in her first big success, "The Great White Hope" in 1968-she is wary of heing typecast as that perennial ugly duckling, "Next time out," she said firmly, "I'm going to be glomorous."

stairs to a pointed backdrop that resembled a plantation more than the Executive Mansion while blacks stood outside singing a mournful song that began:

In an effort to improve "1600 Pennsylvanie Avenue." the show's producers turned to two young black men, one of whom, Gilbert Moses, 33, had devoted much of his previous career to directing some of the most belligerent black theater ever staged in New York. Mr. Moses and his colleague, choreographer George Faison, 30, promptly set out to meliow the racisl relationships perceived by the white creators and to inject a strong element of hope into the show. In addition, by abandoning the original structure of '1600 Pennsylvania Avenue," Mr. Moses and Mr. Faison, who became co-directors of the show seven weeks ago, made it possible for the interas e unit for the first time.

'We have made America on the stage," Mr. Faison

But if brotherhood has emerged on stage, something more like civil war has occurred in the wings between Mr. Lerner and Mr. Bernstein. According to friends, Mr. Bernstein wanted to let the project die after the Philadelphis opening, but Mr. Lerner nsisted nn keeping it alive. Mr. Lerner had promised to produce new material, but fell behind schedule delivering it, further irritating Mr.

The time for redoing the show has been short, and the odds against the show becoming a smash hit are ling. Roger L. Stevens, who is producing the musics! with Robert Whitehead, said that if it passes critical muster Tuesday night, be is prepared to credit Mr. Moses and Mr. Faison with the biggest "tumaround" in recent Broadway history.

"1600 Pennsylvania Avenue," named for the formal street address of the White House, has traveled as arduous a route as anyone who was ever elected to the mansion it commemorates. Few would have predicted a troubled journey for the musical given the extraordinary talents involved in its creation and execution.

The idea for the venture wes conceived by Mr. Lerner more than three years ago when he pondered, as be put it, "how nearly the White House was taken from us." He enlisted Leonard Bernstein, a friend since college days at Harvard, resulting in a colleboration the two men hed talked about for years but never tested. It was not Mr. Lerner's or Mr. Bernstein's original intent to wait until the Bicentennial to mount the musical, but delays brought about that happy coincidence. A melding of the talents of Mr. Lerner and Mr. Bernstein-their names are in larger typerace on the marquee than the title of the show—had no trouble attracting backers ($900,000 from the Coca-Cola Corporation) or talent (Ken Howard as the ten successive Presidents, Patricia Routledge as the First Ladies and Gilbert Price as Lud Simmons, the fictional servant-hero). It also drew crowds; previews in Philadelphia, Washington and New York have been sellouts for two months. But many of those who turned out, particularly critics, did not like what they

Audiences were clearly not being "entertained," a development quickly sensed by Mr. Lerner, who patrols the back of the theater during previews of his shows. Mr. Lerner saye he knew the moment the show opened in Philadelphia that it was too "repetitive," too diffuse in its structure and that much would have to be discarded and revised. A tenaclnus man, he began a schedule of all-night writing sessions that was to continue through the show's Washington run and its ten days of previews

Robbins to make some suggestions for improvements. and Mr. Robbins traveled to Philadelphia to spend several days studying the show. At the same time Mr. Stevens and Mr. Whitehead began looking for e new director to replece Frank Corsaro, who, citing "artistic differences," left the show in Philadelphia along with the original choreographer, Donald McKayle.

Mr. Bernstein asked Jerome

Then Robert Lantz, a longtime literary and theatrical egent who represents Mr. Bernstein, suggested that another of bis clients, Gilbert Moses, would be a good replacement. Part of Mr. Lantz's thinking was that Mr. Moses, in eddition to his recognized talents, could as a black exercise more freedom than a white director in removing the repeated references in the original to racial injustice.

The two producers hired bim. They also signed Mr. Faison, who had collaborated with Mr. Moses on the black musical "The Wiz." The two men, billed as co-directors, took over the show in Wash-

Mr. Moses had built a considerable reputation as a gifted director in a number of areas, but with a particular concentration on the works of such bleck playwrights as Ed Bullins, Charles Gordone, Melvin Van Peebles and Imamu Baraka, the former LeRoi Jones. Mr. Faison had been a principal dancer with the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater for three years, bed choreographed the black musicals "The Wiz" and "Don't Bother Me, I Can't Cope" and had founded his own successful dance company, the Genrge Faison Universal Dance Experience.

Although those involved in the choice of Mr. Moses and Mr. Faison claim that not that much thought was given at the time to the fact the two men were block (Mr. Mc-Kayle, the original choreographer, is also black), there is general agreement that ultimetely it made a significant difference.

"A white director would not have been as sensitive to the bleck experience," said Gilbert Price, the black lead in the play.

Mr. Stevens said that with the arrival of Mr. Moses and Mr. Faison the treatment of raciel attitudes "came from within instead of being superimposed."

There is little dispute with the Philadelphia critics over what the two men inherited in the middle of March in Washington, "The show was too apologetic," said Mr. Moses. "It set s cynical hypothesis. It didn't celebrate the vitality and Intellect that make this country work." He said he bad found the work "very indulgent" and

"very emotional" on the subject of race. "There was too much teaching and preaching," said Mr. Price, "and too little Carl Hall, a black singer, said he found the original "laborious and repetitious, It was a whole evening of lectures set to music."

Mr. Faison said the stereotyping didn't stop with the blacks. "It set up whites in some pristine world off to the side." He said the play also failed to take into eccount the "heroism" of some Presidents or the possibility that they "might have been doing some things right."

Mr. Lerner himself, while saying that he had thought he was writing a "celebration," conceded that the product was "moody, introspective and troubled."

Mr. Moses and Mr. Falson said their overall purpose was to make the show more theatrical and entertaining, more "palatable" to the eudience and specifically more the "celebration" that Mr. Lemer thought he had writ-

The first thing the two men attacked was the show's structure, which in an unintended wsy had introduced e degree of segregation into the show and the cast. In the original conception, the production was staged as a dress rehearsal, permitting the actors and actresses to step out of character between scenes to question the conduct of the figures in the play. A lot of these out-ofcharacter dialogues had blacks challenging whites. Moreover, the manner in which the original version told of life in the White House set off the white Presidents and their families from the fictional black staffmembers.

"The cast was separated into blecks and whites, often with different rehearsal times," recalled Howard Ross, e white singer. "I don't think anyone realized it then, but it bad an effect."

Now the rehearsal concept is confined to the opening and the closing of the show. Mr. Moses and Mr. Faison have kent the "Upstairs, Downstairs" format but have attempted to generate more-character development. By way of illustration, Mr. Moses said they hed just added a new number opening the second act call "40 Acres and a Mule," a song meant to express the expectations of post-Civil War blacks that subject is now i. they would gain access to property and freedom of movement "We're now talking about real people after the Civil War who thought they were going to be free," Mr. Moses explained.

Then there was wbat Mr. Moses called the "confusion about the role of servants." He said the book had underestimated "the kind of intelligence a black man could acquire in the White House." In a scene which has

Thomas Jefferson exhibiting to White House luncheon guests exotic foods from his trevels (waffles, ice cream, spaghetti and brown betty) the servants were originally supposed to register wideeyed surprise. They were also meant to be terrified by a display of magic, now out of the show,

The Mighty Royal Rolls Into New York

arlier this year-presumably because publishers either think alike or perhaps just steal one another's ideas—two books were published, one in the United States and one in Britain, in which people, most of them well known as I recall, described their first love affair, The English version was called "You Always Remember the First Time," and while I am not convinced that you always do, the idea is underiably a cute one. In any event I will always remember my first ballet company.

As a culture-conscious hrat I had seen a few matiness of the Ballets Russes before World War II, but my first real ballet experience was with the British national ballet, which was then called the Sadler's Wells and later became institutionalized as the Royal Ballet. Since 1949 it has become pretty much of a New York institution as wellindeed, the company is now on its 15th visit to America. For the past 11 years, since I so joyously became a New Yorker, my relationship with the company has completely changed. I see it far less frequently and, when I do see it, probably for more concentrated periods. As a result, my perceptions on its development are certainly not more acute, but possibly more objective.

Watching the Royal Ballet during the first week of its current New York season at the Metropolitan Opera House, I was aware more than ever before what a magnificent machina for dancing this company has become. It rolls across the stage like some mighty tank pushing aslde objections to its taste or creativity with its sheer bulk and power. It has grown into a fantastic company. The last time I saw the Royal was last summer in a tent in London's Battersea Park, and it looked very tacky. Now, in New York, where the company always dances better than in London almost as if hy tradition, the strengths of the troupe are once more apparent. But those strengths-which in terms of sheer dance power keep on getting stronger-are, I submit, a little curious.

The first week's program-and I saw all but a couple of performances-consisted of nothing but Kenneth MacMillan's version of "Romeo and Juliet" and "Swan Lake." In a sense this is amazing. Out of 32 performances the company is giving in New York, 21 are devoted to "Romeo and Juliet," "Swan Lake," and MacMillan's "Manon."
In addition, Frederick Ashton's two-act "La Fille Mal Gardée" is featured on four of the other programs.

Such unadventurous programming (a comparisoo with the repertory of the New York City Ballet or even American Ballet Theater amply demoostrates the cootention) has been blamed on the Hurok organization. This is harmless nonsense bred of ignorance, for what is truly significant is that this New York programming is typical of the programming to Loodon. What the Royal Ballet does in New York is precisely what it has been doing for years. Although Sol Hurok was a great man, his choice of repertory was just the same as his successors'—and is much the now better, and Adam Luders's old foot injury, which was better, too. Mostly, however, the talk was about "Union Jack" "Birds." They will be two of Mr. Balanchine's big bal-

The world will see "Union Jack" when the company does it at its spring gala. "Union Jack" is the second in a series of ballets that Mr. Balanchine calls his "Entente Cordiale," the first hav-ing been "Stars & Stripes," and whatever else it will he it will be a spectacular. "Union Jack" will have flags, marching regiments in kilts and guardsmen in bushies. It will also have the sme donkey that was in Ba-lanchine's "Don Quixote."

Nonetheless, Mr. Balan-chine hopes to soon do what will be even bigger than "Union Jack." It is to be called "Birds of America" or Birds of Audubon," and in the company, where it is usually just called "Birds," it is now almost legendary. Mr. Balanchine has been working on it the last five or six years, and thinking about it even longer than that, and it is to be his great hymnto America.

Mr. Balanchine, of course, is Russian, or, more precisely, Georgian, but he wears Zuni Indian jewelry and Western shirts, and he can be deeply moved by the lyrics of, say, Lorenz Hart. In his way, Mr. Balanchine is the most American of men.

He wants "Birds," for example, to end with the sun. Bridge, while a great American eagle hovers overhead, and dancers who represent the people from all over the world are paying homage. The ballet will be more or less based on the life of James Audubon, who, the legend goes, was really the lost dauphin, Louis XVII. He is supposed to have died in prison in 1795, but no one is sure, and so there is a mystery about him.

Mr. Balanchine sees the dauphin coming to America. He sees him in the forest primezval and with the Salem witches. He sees him turning into Audubon and then into Johnny Apples He sees apples doing a great square dance, and he sees wagon trains, Indian attacks, and someone called Princess Thunderbird.

Some people in the company even see "Birds" as the New York City Ballet's answer to "Swan Lake." What no one quite sees now, however, is enough money

"This is one of the diffi culties the outside world doesn't understand," Hope Sydeman, the financial administrator of the company, said. She was sitting in her office on the fourth floor of the New York State Theater, while the company was rehearsing "Union Jack" on the fifth floor. The dancers made the building shake.

Miss Sydeman said that it took more than $6 million a year to run the company. She said that about $4 million of this came from box office receipts, and that about $1 million came from Federal, state and municipal funds, and that one way or another this year the company had to raise more than $1 million. This is one reason, she said, that the gala on May 12, when tickets will cost up to $125 apiece, is

The gala will be graced by the Earl of Harewood and Vice President Rockefeller. who will join in unveiling an Augustus Saint-Gaudens hust of Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln Center, after all, was named for Abraham Lincoln, but there has never been rising over the Golden Gate anything there to comemmorate him. The Bicentennial gala, it was thought, would be the time to remedy this.

"Marveious man, Lord Harewood," Mr. Kirstein was saying now.

Lord Harewood was invited to the gala because Mr. Kir-stein thought it would be good in the Bicentennial year to have a descendant of King George III there. Besides, in 1950, when the New York City Ballet first toured Britain, the British, except for Lord Harewood and a very few others, did not much like

"'BAMBINA' is so fundamantally different from almost any film you can call to mind that it's hard to characterize, 'BAMBINA' departs from all pradictability, achiaving sexuel variations that balance precariously between outrageous humor and the most unconventional romance Imaginable. In fact, I defy you to Imagine it until you see it."—Archer Winsten, New York Post

"One can only wonder what kind of mind could have conceived of such a situation." -Kathleen Carroll, N.Y. Daily News

"'BAMBINA' is shocking in its conception, sensitive in its execution. 'BAMBINA' has a theme so original and daring that it takes your breath away, and yet it emerges as one of the most innocent end pure love stories imaginable. It is a devastatingly complicated triengla which is brilliantly manipulated by director Alberto Lattueda. Funny, haart-breaking, serdonic and romentic with a capital R, 'BAMBINA' manages to present what in lesser hands might have proved to be uniquely distasteful situations with the best of taste, uniquely bizarre events with envisble finesse. The uniquely bizarre events with envieble finesse. The ramarkable sincerity that shines from every frame invests 'BAMBINA' with a seductive quality of grace. it touched me deeply."
—Norma McLain Stoop, AFTER DARK Magazine

"'BAMBINA' deals with a new kind of love story-one without any other factors usually involved in love: common interests; shared values; same hobbies; same intellectual level etc. Here is love at its purest end simplest, most basic. She is uncomplicated and pure. She has no guile, no deviousness. He begins with all guile and deviousness and is converted by her innocence Into a real human being finally capable of love."

—Arthur Janov, Ph.D., author "Primal Scream"

theories range from a belief that they reflect heightened public epprehensinn over the future because of energy shortages and slower economic growth, to a supposed alienation and disillusionment about today's world among same young people, to a profit-mntivated, collective search for something different at a time when the public is saturated with copsand-robbers stories.

Some moviemakers, such as Mr. Spielberg, don't even like the term science fiction and deny they are part of an easily definable trend. "I know people are going to classify it as science fiction because it's an easy handle tn latch on tn." he said nf his new film about U.F.O.'s. "But it really won't be science fiction; I prefer to think of it as preternatural contemporary science fact.

"In reality, it will be about reality," he said a bit mysteriously, adding that it v encompass some elements of an adventure story, but otherwise refusing to discluse any details of the movie, which is scheduled for release late this year.

Other filmmakers, however, dn see a trend. "I think they are today's westerns." said Mr. Zeitman. They giva you action, they take you into new territory and new terrain; and there are no limits on what you can do; creatively, you don't bave to warry about reality."

In June, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which doesn't make many motion pictures these days, will buld the premiere "Logan's Run," a Saul David production about life in the 23d century, in a world run by a tyrannical computer and where everybody must die at 30-until someone rebels against the system. At American International Pictures, five science-fictinn pictures are in production. and several more are tentatively planned. Scheduled for release this summer, for example, are "Future World, about a futuristic amusement park, and "At the Earth's Core," based nn a book by Edgar Rice Burroughs.

Samuel Z. Arkoff, the chairman of American International, attributes the rebhunding interest in an oldtime Hollywood staple product to current public taste and a change in filmmakers' approach to science-fiction

Although the trend, he said, is related to today's Hallywood search for "big" films that "can give you what you can't get free on television," it's much broader than that. Instead of probing physical frontiers, Mr. Arkoff continued, science fictinn mnvies nowadays are more likely to "explore things of the mind, the mental state."

"I think this is what interests the young directors like

also belps to bring in wnmen; in the old days, science-fiction pictures were pretty much limited to men and boys, mostly because of the mechanical things.

"I think some of it is connected to this interest in pseudo-religious things; a lot of young people today are looking for a substitute to formal religion. During the 60's they found-and losttheir mecca, and oow they're disillusioned, after Kent State, Watergate and Vletnam. I think the appeal of what we call science-fiction movies-especially what I see as a new emphasis on the world of the mind in such films—is connected to this search for religiosity."

Seven years after man first demonstrated that ha could reach the minn, Mr. Arknff said, the new generation of science-fiction films is much less likely than the earlier ones to emphasize futuristic gadgetry and machinery per se. "Science fiction, in a way, is a misnomer," he said. "What I'm saying is that plex and complicated mat-To a certain extent, he said, the interest in acience-fiction is related to a parallel interest among moviemakers recently in socalled "psychic" films, of which the highly successful The Exorcist" was an example. At least four major films dealing with parapsychnlogy and psychic phenomena are nnw before the cameras here, including "The Heretic: Exorcist, Part II." And even such a "now" personality as rock singer David Bowie will soon turn up as a futuristic figure in Nicolas Roeg's "The Man Whn Fell to Earth."

Mr. Zanuck and Mr. Brown declined to interpret "Puma," their projected film, as part of a Irend. They sald they were simply looking for an entertaining subject, came up with an idea for a story set in the future, decided to produce a picture based on the idea and approached screenplay. He decided to dn the story first as a novel. Fearing an effort to pirate their idea, they would not discuss the plot, but Mr. Zanuck said, "It will be on the scale of 'Space Odyssey." He said "Puma" wnuld be released in about twn years.

The current flurry of preparations for new science-fiction films suggests the possibility of a glut of such movies sometime soon. Some mnviemakers concede this possibility, but most say science-fiction films would still make up a comparatively small portion of the industry's total ilm directors—great film directors—are not as peripatetic as jugglers. Though film directors carry fewer props they are surrounded by haggage that is not always tn be packed up and crated without causing certain damage. To anyone in this country who admires Ingmar Bergman's films, which appear to be as much a product of Swedish society, landscape, language, custom, expectation and heritage as of the director's unique sensibility, the news of his decision to leave Sweden and settle abroad must be as disturbing as it is to his countrymen. It's not a matter of sentimentality or even of politics, though Bergman's treatment by the hureaucrats of the Swedish socialism he admired is the material of a 21st century nightmare. One worries about how well the Bergman genius will travel.

Can a Director Grow on Foreign Soil?

The roots of Bergman's genius, more than those of any nther important contemporary director, are so deeply embedded in the life of his bomeland that it's almost impossible to imagine a non-Swedish Bergman film. Perhaps charming divertissements like "The Magic Flute," but nothing nf the order of "Face to Face," "Scenes From A Marriage," "Cries and Whispers," "Persona," nr even his seemingly stateless works like "Shame" and the one-hour TV film, The Ritual."

Some great directors travel safely. Others don't. Whether they are portable or nnt has as much tn do with their methods as with their concerns, which may well be the same thing ultimately. Only two of Lins Bunuel's extraordinary films, "Viridiana" and "Tristana," were made in the Spain that shaped Buriuel's very particular vision of society, mao and the God that is not there. All of the other films were made in either Mexico or France and although each is a uniquely Bunuelian work, it is also indelibly Mexican or French. With hindsight it's possible to attribute Bunuel's success to his being a kind of commentator whn would have been an nutsider even if he had never left bome.

It makes no difference whether Buñuel's characters speak French nr Spanish since he is at ease in both languages that share a Latin root. When the chips were down, Buñuel has even been ahle tn direct English language films with honor-"Robinson Crusoe" and "The Young One." Compared in the introverted Bergman, Buñuel is an exuberant extrovert. He travels successfully, though only to those places where he feels a basic kinship.

Federico Fellini, one of Bergman's greatest admirers, is as uniquely Italian as Bergman is Swedish, and though in expansive nature one would assume that he could work anywhere, given a certain amount of shakedown time, Fellinl's work is absolutely fused with the Italian scene and the Italian temperament. He gnt byjust barely-when he used American actors like Anthony Quinn, Broderick Crawford and Richard Basehart in Italian roles, but the practice always represented a compromise for his films. On the basis of her work to date, Lina Wertmuiler also would seem in be a talent somehow rooted in a particular region whose gestures and language form the contant as well as the shape of her movies.

In an earlier era when filmmaking was more of an organized industry than it is today, directors were more easily transplantable, even at fairly advanced ages. Fritz Lang was 46 when he first began to work in Hollywood. Ernst Lubitsch was 31, Michael Curtiz 39, Alfred Hitchcock didn't begin his Hollywnod career until he was 41, though, of course, there was no language barrier for him.

Hollywood was one of the few beneficiaries of the rise of the Third Reich. Among the men who went to California in the thirties and early forties: Billy Wilder, Otto Preminger, Curt Siodmak, Douglas Sirk, Max Ophula and the greatest of them all, Jean Renoir, whn was 47 when he landed in the United States. Some, like Ophuls and Renoir, returned to Europe when the war was over, but they survived the Hollywood system. Just how Renoir survived is one of the most moving and witty elements in his autobiography, "My Life and My Films."
"My problem." Renoir writes, "was and will always be the same, arising out of the fact that the calling I seek to practice has nothing to do with the film industry. I bave naver been able to come to terms with the purely industrial side of films. Hollywood's detractors suppose that the weakness of the industry lies in its anxiety to make money at all costs, and that by catering to the public taste it falls into mediocrity. There is some truth in this, but the desire for gain is not the worst thing about it.

"The real danger, in my opinion, lies in a hlind love of so-called perfection, to obtain which a multiplicity of talents is called upon. Such and such a film is hased on a literary masterpiece, scripted and revised by half-adozen leading script writers and entrusted to a director who is equally celebrated. . . . A big Hollywood film is dished up like a melon, in separate stices."

In addition to being one of the modern masters, Rennir is a pliant man. During his atay in Hollywood he managed to adapt himself to the system long enough to make several extraordinary "American" films, "The Southerner," "Diary of A Chambermaid" and "Woman on The Beach." Renoir is a social animal as well as a poet.

Roman Polanski bas had no trouble adapting to the filmmaking systems in France, England and the United States, but the results ("Repulsion," "Macbeth," "Rosemary's Baby" and "Chinatown") suggest ha is a director who was made for the commercial system and not the eccentric talent he was first thought to be on the basis of his Polish-made "Knife in The Water." Milns Forman, this year's Oscar-winner ("One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest") seems finally to have found a place in American films, though neither "Cuckoo's Nest" nor "Taking Off," his first film here, has the resonance of his Czech films, "Loves of A Blonde" and "The Firemen's Ball." Ivan Passer, another gifted Czech, whose latest film, the internationally sponsored "Crime and Passion," is a disaster, has made two interesting American films, "Born to Win" and "Law and Disorder," though both are the work nf a man who seems to be hanging around America, on a tourist visa, not quite belonging yet.

It may be reasonably argued that every man's life is a succession of exiles, if only the emotional ones that are a part of growing up. That Bergman should have to begin again in a new land at the age of 58 because of anme nonsensa about income taxes is incredible. How to wish him well?

his is the sesson that was—the opera season in New York, anyway. So, as always, statistics are in order. But, first, a comment or two. It was just about a year ago that the Metropolitan Opera annouoced its reorganization. Schuyler Chapin was out, Anthooy Bliss was in-continuing as executive director, and given in addition the title of "principal administrative officer." Which meant, of course, that the Metropolitan Opera was dropping tha title of "general manager." The reorganization involved a troika, with Bliss on top, and James Levine and John Dexter at the bottom. Levine was music director, and Dexter was director of productions.

So the 1975-76 season started with a new command. But the season still remained Chapio's, Planning for 1975-76 had started two years back and more, and when the announcement was made on June 26, 1975, it was far too late to make any changes for the oncoming season. The only changes would be invisible: changes in policy, in administrative niceties, perhaps in personnel. But there could be no changes in repertory or in castings. Those had been set for a long time.

Whatever the artistic results of the season, one thing is certain. The leadership at the Metropolitan Opera has maintained a remarkably low profile. Gona are the days when Rudolf Bing would go on the air, demanding the extermination of music critics. Gone even are the days when Schuyler Chapin, after every performance, would go backstage, congratulating singers and musicians. These days the participants in a performance do not even know that there is such a thing as management. Obviously Bliss is a believer in deeds rather than words. But it will take a few years to see how things turn out.

Across the atreet, at the New York State Theater, the New York City Opera's doings were pursued with its usual imperturbability. Whatever strains there wereand there were many, especially in the fund-raising area-did not show oo the surface. Only once in a while did a note of high-pitched irritation make its whistling sound. Julius Rudel for years has been convinced that most critics put his company in a subservient position to the Metropolitan, and that acrovs him no end. (It cuts no ice with him that the Metropolitan believes. with equal fervor, that critics lean over backwards to protect-the New York City Opera.)

The season just ended contained some significant statistics. When the Metropolitan dropped its curtain on April 17, after 27 weeks, it bad given a total of 194 performances of 22 operas (counting Puccini's "Il Trittico" as one opera). The seasoo was four weeks shorter than its predecessors. That meant the City Opera, which maintained its normal leogth of seasoo, is beginning to approach the Metropolitan Opera in certain vital statistics. The City Opera season ended last Saturday with a total of 21 weeks, 161 performances and 28 operas-six more operas than the Metropolitan had in its repertory.

One always expects the City Opera repertory to be more adventurous than that of the Metropolitan. This season the disparity was wider than ever because of the unusually static nature of tha bigger house's repertory. There were no novelties at all at the Metropolitan, unless "I Puritani" and the "Trittico" be regarded as such, and they really shouldn't be. Consider the following, from the City Opera list: "Ashmedai," "Die tote Stadt," "A Village Romeo and Juliet," "The Turn of the Screw,"

"The Ballad of Baby Doe," "Lizzie Borden," "Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria" and "Lucrezia Borgia." That, plus standard operas. Not many opera companies in the world can match the City Opera repertory in advecture.

In line with being a more "American" company than the Metropolitao, which has a much more international flavor, the City Opera sings much more in English. The Metropolitan Opera repertory is largely Italian. Of the 194 performances, 127 or 65 percent (so my trusty pocket calculator tells me) were sung in Italian; 17 percent were sung in German, 8 percent to French, 5 percent in Russian and 3 percent in English. In reality, there was only one opera io English-Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel"-and that happens to be a German opera which the Metropolitan decided to do in our vernacular, presumably for the kiddies.

The City Opera does not give the kind of statistical breakdown that the Metropolitan does, But of tha 28 operas in the 1975-76 repertory, ten were sung in Eoglish. At a rough guess, 35 percent of all performances used English. This is not the tima or place to get into a discussion about translated opera, Rudel is a strong believer in Opera-in-English, But the acoustics of the New York State Theater are terrible, and in many locations no language comes off the stage. Rather one hears a mushysounding collection of vowels and consonants that might as well be Mongolian.

Next season the Metropolitan Opera is going to have a littla more backbone, what with a repertory that includes "Lulu," "Esclarmonde," "Dialogues des Carmelites" and "Le Prophète." The seasoo just concluded saw little to cheer about. Of the new productions, "Le Nozze di Figaro" was stiff musically and dramatically. Two of tha three "Trittico" operas were new: "Il Tabarro," which had a good set and a strong performance headed by Cornell MacNeil and Teresa Kubiak; and "Suor Angelica," in which the production solved the problem of the miracle by not having any. The new "Puritami" had strong sioging by Joan Sutherland, curiously ragged singing from superstar Luciano Pavarotti, limp conducting from Richard Bonynge, and a traditional set. "Aida" was disliked by most except this critic, who thought tha projectioos were moody and affective, who admired the general approach (with strong reservations, however, about the bent-wrist attitudes given to the singers) and even the choreography, which had some oew ideas about the Triumphal Scene.

At the City Opera, the new productions were headed by a colorful, workable, well-sung and well-conducted "Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria" by Claudio Mooteverdi. This is tha kind of opera tha City Opera is best fit to do. It also is well adapted to contemporary opera, and no matter what one thinks of Josef Tal'a "Ashmedai," it received a brilliant performance, energetically and imaginatively directed by Harold Prince. Another new production, of Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," was for Beverly Sills and her fans.

During the fall season there was a new production of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger"-in English. This, it appeared to many, was an example of opera the City Opera is least fit to do. Others, bowever, thought it a smart production, fast-moving and lissome. This listener was one of the naysayers. From where he sat (first ring) the English was sheerly unintelligible. And instead of the big sweep of sound one expects from a "Meistersinger," it came out thin, in chamber-music proportions. The City Opera insists that there was oo reduction in Wagner's orchestration, and technically that is correct. But the City Opera Orchestra did not have the all-important string weight for the score.

Anyway, as if to throw the gage right back into tha doubters' faces, Rudel has announced for cext fall a "Fliegende Holländer." So there. Rudel himself will conduct the Wagner opera, as he had conducted "Die Meistersinger." Two other new productions will be "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," starring Beverly Sills, and Menotti's "The Saint of Bleecker Street." Then there will be Offenbach's "La Belle Hélène," sung in English, and a welcome novelty it will be. It will join "Fledermaus" and "Pinatore" in the lighter side of the repertory. Talking about Gilbert and Sullivan, tha City Opera has been quiescent for several years, standing pat with "Pinafore" and "Mikado." Isn't it time for a new one? "Patience"? "Yeoman of the Guard'? Or perhaps (dare one bope) "Princess Ida"?

D'Oyly Carte Tradition vs. 'The Hot Mikado'

By FREDERICK S. ROFFMAN

Ever since 1879, when the "Pinafore craze" swept the country and the number of "H.M.S. Pinafore" produc tions reached epidemic proportions, New York has beer. a second bome for the Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

Yet despite the many local G&S performances staged each season, it has been seven years since the genuine article, the D'Oyly Carta Company, with its distinctive production style and seasoned performers, has been with us. Now, it is returning to New York on May 4 for a three-week stay at the Uris Theater, doing its three favorites - "Pinafore," 'The Pirates of Penzance," and "The Mikado."

The production traditioo established by Gilbert and Sullivan with the original 19th-century productions is the basis of the D'Oyly Carte's stylistic approachstrengthened by a continuity of actors and singers who have passed on subtle points of timing and interpretation to successive performing generations. Still, contrary to a popular misconception, the company does not reproduce, rigidly and literally, the stage directions set down in Gilbert's promptbooks.

The D'Oyly Carte tradition is a "living" one that continually evolves. The "look" of the productions, despite obvious stylization, is actually newer than those of other tradition-oriented companies such as Moscow's Bolshoi Opera or even, on occasioo the Metropolitan Opera. Interpretations of the Gilbert and Sullivan works bave come in for re-examination, and new approaches have been tried. To make some operas play better, dialogue has been pruned and musical numbers omitted (though the results are often debatable). Recent directors have concentrated especially on stripping away decades of accumulated rococo business and encouraging the performers to reassess what they are

While the D'Oyly Carte's crisp methods spring from the British temperament. Americans have often treated the operas far more freely and even with breezy familizrity. Although the best native productions copied the D'Oyly Carte model, the 1930's and 1940's saw a series of productions that played fast and loose with doing and why.

It all began in the seasoo of 1938-1939 when two different productions of e jazzed-up, black "Mikado"

beatedly competed on Broadway-a distinctly Gilbertian

In September 1938, the Federal Theater Project group in Chicago, under the direction of Harry Minturn, presented "The Swing Mikado," an all black version reset on a tropical island. While retaining most of the original dialogue and score, this production "improved" the more rhythmical numbers with modern syncopations and vernacularized lyrics ("Does you want to know who we are?/We is gentlemen of Ja-

When producer Mike Todd tried to buy the production for Broadway, the Federal Theater decided to move it to New York themselves, and on March 1, 1939-after 22 weeks in Chicago - "The Swing Mikado" opened at the New Yorker Theater with a $1,10 top.

Not at all discouraged, Todd decided to mount his own version of "The Mikado." He hired powerhouse musical comedy director Hassard Short to handle the staging, Net Carson to create spectacular costumes and sets (including a 40-foot waterfall of soap bubbles and an erupting volcano), and Bill Robinson ("Mr. Bojangles") to tap his way through the title role. Where the FTP production had been cooteot to discreetly "swing" a few numbers, Todd's orchestrathe full treatment to the eotire score. The result was more of a Savoy stomp than a Savoy opera, and the coocoction was accordingly dubbed "The Hot Mikado."

Todd opened his production on March 23, 1939 at the Broadhurst Theater, and tickets at a $3.30 top quickly became as "hot" as the new arrangements. So, 13 days later, "The Swing Mikado" moved right across the street to the 44th Street Theater! Todd fought back by hanging show banner from the sida of the Sardi Building-obliterating his rival's marquee from the view of anyone walking east on the blockand then, after the 85th per formance, pulled an ace from his sleeve. He sold the show to the World's Fair, where it played through the summer -four times a day, seven days a week-at a price scale (40c to 90c) with which "The Swing Mikado" could not

If a "swing" and a "hot" Mikado were not enough, May 1939 saw the addition of "The Red Mikado" as part of the revue "Pins and Needles." Taking a jab at the recent barring of Marian Anderson from Constitution Hall by the DAR, the "three little maids" became members of the Daughters of the American Revolution ("Three tor, Charles L. who not only carried fans marked "Made in China" but spouted blue blood when treated to an application of the Lord High Executioner's sword. Then, amid posters touting a "Hollywood Mikado" starring Gable and Crawford, a "Hubert's Flea Circus Mikado," and a "Minsky Strip Mikado," supporters of Sir Arthur and Sir William decided to take action by picketing with signs that proclaimed "Unfair to Sullivan" and "Unfair to Gilbert."

These complaints by loval Savoyards were effective for six years until the phenomenon was repeated with rival adaptations of "Pinafore." The first opened on May 24, 1945 at the Broadway Theater, under tha titla of "Memphis Bound," which recounted bow, when the showboat Caliboga Queen runs aground on a Mississippi mudbank, the all-black company put on a production of "Pinafore" (with a little "Trial by Jury" thrown in for good measure) to raise money to refloat her. In the "Pinafore" sequences, Bill Robinson played a Sir Joseph who, in addition to "polishing np the handle on the big front door," tapped up and down a staircase. Avon Long cmoned "I am the captain of the Pinafore," Ada Brown belted, "I'm called Little But-

harmony by a trio.

A week after "Memohis Bound" opened, George S. Kaufman's 'Hollywood Pinafore; or the Lad Who Loved a Salary" opened at the Alvin Theater. With Sullivan's original score and orchestrations, Kaufman's new book was set in the studio of Pinafore Pictures and featured Victor Moore as studio head Joseph W. Porter ("I nodded my head and never said no and now I'm the head of the studio"), William Gaxton as agent Dick Live-Eye ("An agent's life is not a happy one," the tune borrowed from "The Pirates of Penzance") and Shirley Booth as colum-nist Louhedda Hopsons ("I'm called Little Butter-up").

Critics found the satire not only inferior to Gilbert, but to Kaufman's earlier send-up of Hollywood, "Once in a Lifetime" (coauthored by Moss Hart). As George Jean Nathan saw it, all Kaufman had managed to do was "to draw a mustache on Gilbert, who already had one, and a Walrus beaut!" When the show closed after 53 performances, Kaufman shrugged and said, " Hollywood Pinafore' was an idea that looked better on paper than on a stage."

It was an expensive way of proving what the D'Oyly Carte has known all along: the best way to do the operas is as Gilbert and Sullivan wrote them.

into a more modern and caustic drama that incorporated his leftist principles. In addition, the numerous songs of this "ballad opera" would give Kurt Well an opportunity to write an entirely new musical score that would enhance the revised script. The collaboration of Bracht and Weill was one of the most unusual in the history of lyric drama. At first glance, it might seem odd that a major playwright (especially one with such solid experimental credentials as Brecht) would engage in a collaboration that, through the domineering presence of music, might dilute his own artistic control. But unlike the many playwrights (including, in this century alone. Hugo von Hofmannsthal, Gertrude Stein, and W. H. Aoden) who accepted the risks of musical collaboration as a gamble essential for the creation of effective musical theater, Brecht gave up oothing and retained full anthority. He not only devised the structure of the play and determined the positions of the songs, but also was the guiding force in matters of musical tone and expression. (This insistence upon the playwright's ultimate artistic control is what prematurely. ended Brecht's later collaboration with Paul Hindemith. Hindemith—as stubborn as was Brecht-insisted that the composer have the upper hand.) Even under these circumstances, Kurt Weill proved himself a genius of musical theater. Part of his timental and placid songs written for Maxwell Anderson in the years when Weill was an established Broadway composer ('Knickerbocker Holiday," "Lost in the Stars").

But if Brecht was the dominant partner in the creation of works like "The Threepenoy Opera," he always remained a playwright with an acute musical sense. At the very start of his career. he performed in cabarets and sang music be composed for his own poems. When Kurt Weill first came to him in 1927 and suggested a collaboration. Brecht was cool to the idea. He changed his mind soon after, though, and suggested that Weill recompose some of his poems into a short song cycle about a mythical and wholly degeneratc American city named Mahagonny. This cycle, called the "Mahagonny Songspiel," was that year's auccès de scandale at the prestigious Baden-Baden Music Festival. As a result, Brecht and Weill began to rework the cycle into a full-length opera (eventually entitled "The Risc and Fall of the City of Mahagonny"), but in the summer of 1928 they took two months off to write "The Threepenny Opera"-a pisy created not for the avantgarde, or for opera houses or music festivals, but for the commercial world of Berlin theater. From the very start it was meant as a work that might bridge the gap between progressive experimentation and popular sensibility.

This was by no means the only time that Brecht did "borrowing" for a play. Often his plays were adapta-tions of historical incidents or legends ("The Caucasian Chalk Circle") and he freely reworked dramas by Mar-lowe, Shakespeare, and Molière. same as the company offers in London, The concentration is on spectacle, ensemble and brilliant stellar performances. From an American point of view, the Royal Ballet is run almost more like an opera company than a ballet.

This, I stress, is neither good nor bad in itself. It is simply the way the company has developed—possibly, if we are to look at it from a historical perspective, the way the company had to develop following the pattern its founder, Dame Ninette de Valois, laid down in 1931. Whether she knew it or not, the cholces she made in the first 10 years of the company's existence established its form for all time. Yes, there could be a palace revolution, but it is just about as likely as Britain becoming a republic, or the Royal Shakespeare Company devoting its life and times to the works of Molière.

So, in the course of that first Metropolitan week, I saw not one new work, very few new dancers, four performances of a "Romeo and Juliet" that is not the best lo the world but bappens to be a typically British compromise between all the others, and two performances of a "Swan Lake" which is very traditional and has now retrieved the paim from American Ballet Theater as the best "Swan Lake" in the world.

The Royal Ballet Is like the Bolshol-it could dance a telephone directory and you would still watch. Nowadays, in the ensemble, the men are perhaps a little sharper than the women, but all of them have a grace and presence on stage that is simply sensational. They are so punchy. The other day Terry Hands, director of the RSC's "Henry V" currently in Brooklyn, mentioned casually that since Britain lost its crown imperial there was really nothing for its bright young people to do but go into the arts, thia, while a clear exaggeration, could be partly true.

It must be remembered that another company has been left behind in Britain-with soma of the best dancers, auch as Margaret Barbieri, Stephen Jefferies, Desmond Kelly, Ronald Emblen and Mark Silver. Also, one of the Royal's greatest dancers, Antoinette Sibley, has been on maternity leave and will not return to the stage until later in the summer. Nevertheless, the troupe still looks Naturally, a lot of interest has been generated by the new partnership of Natalia Makarova and Anthony Dowell, god in both "Romeo and Juliet" and "Swan Lake" they went together handsomely. Her unbridled passion and his tightly curbed, yet explosive force, are beautifully matched. Watch them dancing together. But also watch them smiling at one another. They work.

Rudolf Nureyev, up from his sick bed apparently revitalized, was brilliant and inteosely dramatic as Romeo, partnering Merle Park (so far I hava missed their "Swan Lake." And David Wall made the most ardent of Romeos against the oew, slim Lynn Seymour, and also did splendidly with the elequent Monica Mason in "Swan Lake." I was also impressed by Lesley Collier and Wayne Eagling as the youngest of star-crossed lovers in "Romeo." These were all stellar performances, but so well integrated into the firmament of the Royal Ballet.

When you see this company you see not only a ballet, but a way of dancing. It is a total dance impact that you only really get with the Bolshoi Ballet oowadays. These people seem to live dancing, and it is not that they are technically better-Fernando Bujones could probably dance rings round any man in the company—but they have a certain family splidity and a sense of place and home, a sense of what Shakespeare would have termed "order," that makes the company uniquely interesting.

Maas's "Geography of tha Kenneth Anger's Body," "Fireworks," all mada in tha 1940's, had in common with Miss Dereo's films an intimate sometimes intense physicality. And as Susan Sontag has noted, this group of films was also "technically atudied . es professional as possible," within their modest means.

In contrast to Miss Deren's meticulous approach, the second wave of avant-gardists. led by her friends Stan Brakhage and Jonas Mekas in the 1950's, made long, almost unedited diary-style films, seemingly careless works in which these technically proficient moviemakers deliberately cultivated the amateur's mistakes (over-and under-exposures, out-of-focus shots, wild panning movements). They did this partly as an act of rebellion, but mainly to achieve e greater sense of freedom and spontanelty. There experimentalists, in turn, were followed by younger filmmakers who looked into the very elements of film itself: Tony Conrad, with his ominous film, "The Flicker," made up only of inter-mittent dark and bright flashing frames, and George Landow, with his almost selfoescriptive "Film in Which There Appear Sprocket Holes, Edge Lettering, Dirt

Other young experimenters have concentrated upon e single scene. Michael Snow'a "Wavelength," for example, is built entirely upon the "logic" of the zoom shot, extended for 45 minutes, making its mechanical edvance into a room which slowly, slowly, is consumed and made to vanish into picture of the ocean. Slowness is almost totally sustained in the shorter films of Barry Gerson, who has created rich filmic episodes from such common elements as the shadow of e lucent curtain moving back and forth across a brightly pol-ished floor. Ernie Gehr's "Sublime Velocity" gives rapid pulsation to e deserted hallway, by manipulation of the zoom lens every few frames, Harry Smith's handmade animations, and the brilliant symmetries of Jordan Beison and James Whitney, offer diversion in abstract color and design. When Maya Deren showed ber films in New York City in 1946, at the small Provincetown Playbouse which she herself hed rented, such a large crowd gathered outside, the story goes, that a policeman stopped to ask if it were a demonstration, and someone answered, "No, it's a revolution in filmmaking." Now lt's past history. And Maya Deren has taken her place as Mother of the American Avant-Garde Film.

What Makes Barbara Walters Worth a Million?

By LES BROWN

Dinner was franks and eans, "the house specialty," carryover perhaps from numbler times. But it came with candlelight and a good iordeaux, and Barbara Walers spoke of never having o confront again ber old denon, insecurity. One might have expected manic converation from a hard-working roman who had just struck rich, but instead she was effective in a muted tone hat seemed out of character rith her aggressive, and even t times shrill, television per-

Flowers, some beginning to roop and sere, were banked gainst the wall like the hangwer from a wedding. It was our days after the Big Deci-, ion and the front-page press sports that Barbara would e leaving NBC after almost we decades to become the nanchor of the ABC eveing newscast with Harry easoner for $1 million a par. The obvious questions ere how was she taking it. nd what makes her worth ruch a royal paycheck?

"The night it all happened, ie flowers began to arrive od the phone never stopped nging. My friends were so leased for me and so warm. nd yet, through it ail, I · condered wby I was so unappy," Barbara said.

She told of how her friends ften joke about her inability green dress or the blue. But -we all have drivers and this was one of the biggest decisions she had ever had to make-whether to switch to ABC for a million or remain at NBC, whose counter offer had also reached a million dollars. The difference between them was tha immediate chance, at ABC, of becoming an anchorwoman. Why the sadness? Part of it was leaving old friends at NBC for a lot of strangers. at the new network. As if to illustrate, she recounted her secretary's faux pas with a call from a "Mr. Golden-

"What is it in reference to, please?" the secretary had asked, not recognizing the name. The caller was Leonard Goldenson, chairman of the American Broadcasting Companies, Inc., Miss Walters's new employer.

"But it was not just the sadness of leaving NBC. It was all the publicity about the million dollars, a kind of publicity I've never been used to," Barbara said. "I worried all night about public reaction. Some people were going to be resentful of me because of it. But my own feeling was, why should I quarrel about getting a raise? I didn't ask for It."

She feels somewhat less concerned now about the reaction, having sampled how the news was received by some of her public, "Most people, I found, were used to the idea of basketball playdecide upon the smallest ers getting fantastic sums for ings, whether to buy the a few ball games. My driver

At the high stakes he networks play for, he investment of mere million a minor gamble'

many who believe news people should be more pure than sbow-business people. They seem to feel that if you get a million bucks, you're a superstar. And if you're a superstar, you're show biz. And if you're show biz, you can't be pure and can't do justice to the news."

"I don't worry about being able to do the job at ABC but only whether people will accept a woman on the news at night, and whether they feel a woman can have the proper suthority," she remarked. "People tend to go to male doctors. We still have to learn whether they can accept the idea of going to a

She continued: "I know now that I'm totally professional and good at what I do. I may not be great at ABC, but I'know I won't be terrible. This is the kind of confidence that men have always known but women are only just beginning to get. If I make it, there'll be other women in these anchor jobs all over the country. This was wby I wanted Sally Quinn to succeed at CBS, but few Barbara reviewed the pros and cons of her heavy decision, as if making it all over again. "If I had stayed at NBC. I'd have been safe," she began. "No matter what I did -left the 'Today' show, conducted a new magazine, become eventually a co-anchor of the news-I could not be umiliated. This was home. Going to ABC is challenging,

"Yet, I know there are

Her agent, Lee Stevens of the William Morris Agency, had put it well, she thought. Why, he observed, should a good reporter get less on televisioo than a good comedian when news executives at the networks don't get paid less than executives in other departments of the company?

scary. Everyone is watching, looking for failure. But the offer was there, and I'm still young enough to take a chance. Finally, I knew Td always regret it if I didn't seize the opportunity."

"The commercial networks are wary of independent productions, particularly if · She paused for a clgarette. "I won't fall apart if this doesn't work. My entire life is not what I do for a living. Meanwhile; it's exciting to think about some of the things I'd like to do on the

What are some of those things? Well, that's for later, closer to the time she joins ABC-sometime between now and when her NBC contract runs out in September. "I cao tell you this, though," she said. "For me, it's oot going to be a matter of just reading the Teleprompter. I think Harry [Reasoner] and I will be balanced and will spark off good things in each other, I wouldn't have wanted this ob if all it meant was readng tha news. "Look, this fish't to suggest that I want to do happy news or that I would alter the integrity of the newscast, but we are beyond Watergate and Vietnam-those periods when the news was compelling and carried itself. What you find-what all the studies show-is that the three newscasts are about the same except for the appeal of the people before the cameras. As a team, Harry and I could be more interesting than the Women viewers predominate before the sets in the periods before prime time when the newscasts are presented. Part of ABC's bet on Barbara is its belief that she will attract the viewers of ber sex, and she appears confident of 'My biggest fans are women, and not men," she said. "I can tell from the mail and the people I meet that women do identify with me, I couldn't possibly have stayed on the air 12 years without being female. Other women tell me ask the questions they wanted to ask. Quite frankly, -points, it's a bonanza.

although some people fault me for being aggressive, I can't stand not asking the questions that have to be

All right, then, what makes her — of all journalists worth a million a year? "If that's what two networks think I should get," she answered, "they'll get no argument from me. But the money was not what this was all about. It was about opportunity and challenge. I work hard and do good work, and I want to be judged by that and not by bow much 3

Tha question was oot for

Barbara Walters berself to answer. Network television -a $2.5 billion industry in which only three companies share-operates on a grander scale than most media. It responds, too, at every level, to the basic law of show business that governs the price of things: whatever the traffic will allow. To put it simply, the traffic has allowed Barbara Walters to be traded on the talent market for $1 million a year because she possibly will boost the news ratings a notch or two. At the high stakes the networks play for, the investment of a mere million toward lifting ABC's long-static news ratings is a minor gambie, indeed. A television personality overnight can add hundreds of thousands of households to a program simply through his or her presence. The gain of a single rating point puts the newcast in 710,000 additional homes, where it may be watched by approximately 1.2 million extra people. At the rates paid for commercials on the network newcasts in today's market, the gain of a single; rating point should mean a gain of at least $1 million in revenues,

Thus, if by ber presence Barbara Walters should improve the ratings for the ABC Evening News by a single point, she pays back her spectacular salary. If by two ew York's Channel 13 recently presented an hour-long documentary called "Christma's World." Written and directed by Sonja Gilligan, the program was supplied by the Hardtimes Movie Company, an "independent" producing organization. Filmed in 1972 and completed in 1-3, the documentary was made at a cost of $80,000. the showing on Channel 13, the filmmakers were paid 1 100. Their subject was the subject of Andrew Wyath's est famous painting, also called "Christina's World." produced widely all over the world, on everything from ndard prints to teacups and placemats, the painting yws a reclining female figure in an open field looking vard a farmhouse in the background,

The woman's face is not seen and, if the spectator es not notice her somewhat withered arm and gnarled ad, she might be mistaken for a young girl, in fact, woman was Christina Olson, Wyeth's favorite model, who is in her 50's when the artist did the painting. ristina was severely crippled by a form of arthritis and d to drag herself on the ground to get from one place to other. By the time of this documentary, Christina was ad, but the filmmakers decided to use photographs of her, nments from aurviving relatives and cooperative ighbors, and a tour of the old farmhouse to create their rtrait. Besides offering some background on one of a most famous paintings in the country, the film would compt to capture a feeling for life in a coastal village Maine. The documentarians didn't doubt for a moment at the networks would fight for the rights to padcast their "Christina's World."

But, after raising $80,000 with surprising ease among ung brokers on Wall Street, the project ran into expected snags. Andrew Wyeth refused to participate. seph E. Levine, the film producer who had purchased the mhouse as the future site for a Wyeth museum, at st endorsed the documentary plans but later filed a suit to halt production. His reasons were never made clear, but the filmmakers suspect that he was concerned about further criticism of the proposed museum by local citizens who had already voiced resentment of Levine's plans.

The project, however, continued, with the finished product providing fascinating glimpses of both Christina's real world and the world that has sprung up around the famous painting. Among other things, the farmhouse has been restored by Mr. Levine not to its original state but to a duplication of the image of it in the painting. The wood was specially treated to re-create the Wyetb look. The effect is disturbingly unreal.

The documentary is not without its flaws, most notably in a couple of overly sentimental touches. But, with Julie Harris as narrator, it is also belpfully informative and, for the most part, visually stimoing. It is, in brief, the kind of plece that network executives often say they want but cannot find. CBS, for instance, claims it is anxioua to develop new sources of material. But, seemingly, what the network really wants is more competition for producers like Norman Lear, who become more demanding with increasing success. The new sources are then expected to produce material that can compete with the Lear products. There is no pressing demand for originality

The makers of "Christina's World" covered the broadcasting spectrum in their sales campaign. Thay met with the top-echelon executives at all three networks. They pleaded with large corporate sponsors. They got promising nibbles. They were given ridiculous run-arounds. And they finally realized that they were dealing with a system that is virtually closed to outsiders,

Network news departments have their own large staffs and rarely accept "outside" material. Network entertainment departments have their own suppliers for "safe" formula series and generally standard "specials." And the independents, who should be a source of fresh ideas and inventive techniques, are effectively left without a financially feasible showcase for their work. Public television is willing to provide the showcase but seems unable to supply the underpinning of dollars.

So far, public TV has come out ahead. It has acquired and presented, among other offerings, a documentary on Cuba culled from material recorded by a video group called Downtown Community Television. But the Cuban project cost that group about $50,000 and the showing on the Public Broadcasting Service brought in only about $12,000. Considering those paltry rates of return, the independents can hardly be expected to subsidize public TV much longer. The entire attitude toward independent producing outfits, in both the commercial and public TV markets, desperately needs revising.

even smaller financial contributions, announced his candidacy to a largely indifferent world oo March 18. Despite having recently gained some national prominence as chairman of the Senate committee investigating the U.S. intelligence ageocies, he had what the political media people call a "low recognition factor." Nine out of ten Americans had told poli-takers they had never heard of him. which presented a considerable problem for the Church people. The Church campaign staff hit upon a three-step tactical plan: the Senator would husband his meager resources by starting late, while others spent, themselves into debt; he would concentrate on the primaries in the Western states, beginning with Ne-braska in May; and he would use national television to boister his low identification

What the Church people didn't factor in was their own naiveté. On March 21, the Sunday after the Senator announced his candidacy, tima for a Church campaign biography was bought on CBS. The film was done in standard newsreel style: the Senator as World War II officer, previous footage from Church campaigns, clips from Senate hearings, and a slide, flashed for four seconds at the end, asking for contributions to be sent to Church's campaign headquarters in Boise, Idaho. Staff volunteers. had run down the film clips, Hall had written the script and Church had edited the copy. CBS sold them five minutes during halftime of a forgettable National Basketbell Association game. NBA basketball has had so-so ratings this season. In the Far West, where Church was in prime time. enzious to get good exposure, the audience was minus-Stonewalled by the netcule; the game went on late in the morning. About $5,000 in contributions came in, al-

Washington, D.C. The Church people learned a lesson. On April 5, Stan Silverman and Hal Katz of Vitt Media International, the New York-based time buyers for most half of the letters addressed to the U.S. Senate in the Senator's campaign, met with representatives of tha three networks. Silverman and Katz wanted to buy 30 minutes of week-night prime time, preferably in the 9 to 9:30 EST slot. ABC, CBS and NBC had adopted a policy of not selling 30-minute stots in prime time to candidates during the primeries. The official lanation is that the 50called equal-time doctrine means that if a network sells a 30-minute time period to one candidate, then it has to a similar chunk of time to all. "There just aren't any half hours sitting around," says Bob Jamieson, of CBS-Network Sales, "the time been contracted for." True NBC did make an exception for Ronald Reagan, selling him 30 manutes of prime time on March 30; but Reagan, NBC executives reasoned, was the only candidate running against an incumbent President and his opponent has routine access to broadcasting outlets. Unofficially however other considerations have made the networks reluctant to part with prime-time half hours; it is generally held that political broadcasts interfere with audience viewing habits, depress ratings and otherwise cost the networks money (Reagan got his: prime-time balf hour when NBC pre-empted "The Dumplings," a sit-com that ranked 65th among 72 shows in the Nielsens and was already marked for execution). If they have to carry anything political, the network sales people would rather peddle 30- and 60-second spots; such spots can be shoe-horned in here and there in the commercials schedule and sell for up to $70,000 a minute works, the Church-for-President Committee last month petitioned the Federal Communications Commission for a declaratory ruling that the networks' refusal to sell the Senator the time he wanted was depriving Church of the "reasonable access" to the public required by the Federai Communications Act. The committee also claimed that the networks' insistence on 30- or 60-second spots forces Presidential candidates to use "the slogan-ridden forum of tooth whiteners and clothes brighteners." It isn't often that a politician can accuse someone else of sloganeering.

The F.C.C. moved with its usual glacier-like speed when faced with conflicting pressures from the broadcasting industry and the Congress. Two factors complicate the access issue. First, the 'regular" television season ended on April 20, and the networks began offering reruns. But all the major TV markets are currently in a "sweep" period. The sweeps are the periodic Nielsen samplings that help determine bow the television viewing audience is divided among the three networks and, therefore, bow much advertisers will have to pay for commercial spots next season. From nnw until the end of this month, the prime-time programmers will still be keeping close watch oo the ratings scorecards. With the five-minote format, however, both the candidates and the networks can come out ahead. While CBS cut out the fat from the plot, of "Medical Center," not a rubber glove was laid on the eight precious commercial minutes sold to hawk Geritol and other products on the show. In fact, CBS made extra charging Church $14,815 for the time, plus $550 in "cutting costs"—2 surcharge for the surgery done to the "Medical Center" enisode

Church also did well. He prerecorded the talk after two quick runthroughs on his way to the Senate one morning. The public television station in Washington billed him about $300 for use of its facilities, All told, he spent less than $20,000 for five primetime program minutes (compared with the $70,000 he might have had to pay for one prime-time commercial minute). The Nielsen figures indicate he may have captured an audience of 20 million with his surprise appearance at the end of "Medical"

Center." In addition, Church got substantisi wire service and radio news coverage on at least two news cycles. First, they carried stories shout the networks having turned him down (little David vs. the big, bad Goliaths of broadcasting) and then they carried the accusations, in bis televised talk, that : Gerald Ford was a weak President Most important of all,

Church ended his talk with a strong pitch for funds; the campaign contributions address was repeated twice, By last week (the beginning of May) some $50,000 in contributions, more or less attributable to the program, bad come into campaign head. quarters. The Reagan campaign claims a similar payoff; his 30 - minute appearance cost $100,000 and bas brought in an estimated $500,000. If the Congress ever unsuaris the campaign finance laws, the contributions will be doubled with

The arithmetic shows that the five-minute program can be, as one Church campaign advertising," and then some, It may also provide viewers with an opportunity to better judge the candidates. Church used his talk to air his views about multinational corporations and the CIA and FBI; his positions may be well known in Washington but they are not a household topic elsewhere. The format allowed time for more than the hard sell of the short 30second or 60-second spot; also, Church was able to maintain audience interest with out running the room-emptying risk of a 30-minute long

The week after the Church appearance at the end of "Medical Center," Representative Udail went on ABC in the five-minute format. His appeal for funds took tha format a step further by including not only a postal address but two toll-free teles phone numbers "with openators standing by 24 hours to take contributions.

For their part, the Church people are already looking ahead. "Since we asked for thirty minutes," the Senator commented to an aide last week, "we figure CBS should sell us five more five-minute his year the United States is aending a seminar to the Venice Biennale. It is, to be sure, a seminar in the form of an exhibition, but it is a seminar all the same, and everything about it betrays its academic origin. Its very title, "Critical Perspectives in American Art," sounds an entry for a course in a college catalogue, and the itself was, in fact, originally conceived to mark an mic occasion—the opening of the new Fine Arts Center a campus of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. currently oo viaw at the Fine Arts Center Gallery nga May 9) before being dismantled and reduced in for shipment to Venice.

Our Venice Offering—More a Syllabus Than a Show

A few famous names are included in the roster of artists sented in this academic farrago—Robert Motherwell, Warbol, Donald Judd and Agnes Martin, among othershis is not an exhibition that permits any artist, famous scure, to show his true strength. In keeping with the ar spirit, it is the syllabus—solemnly set down in the gue—that dominates the art, for art in an enterprise of sort merely serves to illustrate the so-called "ideas" that gis real concern. The University of Massachusetts News au put the emphasis in exactly the right place when it d, in its mitial news release, that "Five esthetic issues the featured" in the exhibition. "Issues" for study rather works of art are indeed what the show is designed to hese issues are divided into the following categories: d Painting" (illustrated by the work of Robert Motherwell, rt Ryman and Jake Berthot); "Perceptual Fields" (Agnes in, Robert Irwin and Richard Tuttle); "Objected" ald Judd, Richard Artschwager and Joel Shapiro); tural Irony" (Charles Garabedian, H. C. Westermann Jim Roche); and "Narrative Art" (Andy Warhol, Ed ba and Bill Beckley).

Some of these categories are not without a few cultural es of their own. Mr. Warhol's Pop paintings of the 1960'a been clevated for the occasion to the status of "ative" art, though they are patently devoid of narrative est, Mr. Motherwell's well-known Abstract Expressionist --- is converted bere to the more fashionable mode of 1 Painting," though only one painting in the show, an ed picture of 1974, qualifies for that designation, and it ans to be one of the weakest paintings the artist has iced in recent years. As for the work that actually as the banner of "Cultural Irooy" in the show, It sts for the most part—in the art of Messrs. Garabedian oche-of what is best described as Graduate School It is nothing less than ridiculous for the United States represented in a major international exhibition by this bund of recycled labels and provincial talent. but the exhibition abounds in ridiculous judgments. Martin is one of our best abstract painters, and she roduced drawings of the most exquisite delicacy. So series of diagrammation of geometrical forms that do not begin to suggest the first hand, has excelled in more or less Surrealist ngs of words, so bere he is represented by paintings of inction whatever (and paintings, moreover, in which eleged narrative interest is nil). At times, indeed, the rizers of the show seem so intent on subordinating

visual inpact to the interests of their precious syllabus that they seem to have deliberately chosen to show work that will not compete with their own iotellectual handiwork. If this was in fact their intention, they have succeeded beyond their wildest dreams

For the show is a bore and a drag-to look at, if not to read about. Its entire spirit is symbolized by the contribution of Richard Tuttle, whose single work consists of a "Portrait" made up of two tiny pieces of wood, each no larger than two joints of e finger, stuck on the wall and identified by a label that occupies more space than the object itself. Indeed, the paragraphs in the catalogue discussing this momentous work of art occupy-by a rough estimate-a space about 15 times larger than the object, which most visitors to the exhibition will, mercifully, miss anyway, thinking these obnoxious knobs (if they see them at all) to be some kind of imperfection in the surface of the wall they adorn.

When we turn to the catalogue essay on "Perceptual Fields," this is the kind of thing we are offered es explanation of Mr. Tuttle'a arduous labors: "The perceptual elusiveness of Tuttle's work is heightened by the sense it creates in the viewer that the pieces exist in momeots of change," and so on. The fact is, the authors of this essay bad no notion of what Mr. Tuttle would condescend to cootribute to the exhibition. In the catalogue, he is listed as showing a drawing. but be turned up instead with this miserable little object in his pocket. What a farce! If a place had to be found for Mr. Tuttla in this exhibition, his work abould bave been classed as "Cultural Irony," for that iodeed is what it is, though not perhaps in a way either the artist or his admirers quite appreciate.

Io this context, Mr. Motherwell looks like the master be la, even though his three pictures here do less than full justice to his recent work. (One could, I think, bave gone through his last two New York exhibitions blindfolded and still have selected better pictures than those in the show.) Mr. Judd too, looks like a real pro in this company, and Mr. Irwin has creeted one of his characteristic light acrims that, if no masterpiece in itself, has the great virtue of lending an atmosphere of delicacy and tranquillity to the unlovely interior spece of the Fine Art Center Gallery. (What he will do for the American pavilion in Venice remains to be seen.) The artist I feel sorriest for is Joel Shapiro, an interesting young sculptor whose miniaturized structures of houses situated in illusory "distant" spaces are all but swallowed up in the present exhibition. Placed as they are bere, in a space that allows them no room to "expand," they look cramped and small minded, which is quite the reverse of the artist's intention. And the space in Venice will be even more cramped than in Amherst.

The kindest thing that can be said for "Critical Perspectives in American Art" is that it was originally intended, after all, as an academic event. From such events, we do not expect much in the way of artistic-leadership. Explication and the elaboration of theory are their business, and this is really the only business that this seminar in the form of an exhibition has in mind. But as an exhibition for the Venice Biennale? The American show at the Biennale should be, in every sense, a show of strength-above all, a sbow of artistic atrength. The Blennale is not a college campus, and should not be mistaken for one. The effect of this particular exhibition is to suggest to the international art world that American art has gone into academic retreat, that it now 100ks to the seminar room for guidance and approval, that its imaginative energies bave been fatally atrophled by a combination of scholastic caution and sophomoric exhibitionism.

There is just enough truth in this charge to make one cringe all the more at its being mistaken for the whole truth. Much of the American art scene is now deeply involved in arademic interests - in academic jobs, academic patronage and an academic point of view. But this is by no means the whole story, and it should certainly oot be the story we send abroad as the whole story. In a year when the Biennale is expected to be making something of a comeback as a showcase of international achievement, we are simply forfeiting our true strength as a nation with a vigorous artistic culture by sending this weak and confused show as an example of the best we have to offer. As a domestic academic event, it may be comic as well as pathetic; as an international event, it is tragic in its implications.

It remains only to identify the perpetrators of the mess. These are Sam Hunter, professor of modern art at Princeton University: Rosalind Krauss, professor of modern art at. Hunter College, and Marcia Tucker, the curator of contemporary art at the Whitney Museum of American Art. Mr. Hunter's role in this eoterprise is, perhaps, the most surprising. If we were sending to Venice the Motherwell show that he organized at Prioceton a few years ago, we would be represented by something worthy of us, but nothing so simple or so intelligent was probably considered. ew of the 400 photographs included in "Image Before My Eyes" at the Jewish Museum would. qualify as works of art all by themselves. They are like the individual tesserae of a mosaic which are only little blts of colored stone and glass until they are put together in a certain order. And yet the show as a whole is a. work of art of a kind no looger made by painters: a east commemorative portrait intended to preserve the memory of a beloved past.

The subject of this commemorative mosaic is the liferance of the Jews of Poland from 1864 to 1939, and the 400 photographs that are its tesserae were chosen by Dr. :: " Lucjan Dobroszycki aod Dr. Barbara Kirshenblatt-Gimblett from more than 10,000 collected by the YIVO Institute for Jewish Research.

The prototype for this kind of exhibition was Edward :: Steichen's epoch-making "The Family of Man" at the Museum of Modern Art in 1955. In Stelchen's exhibition" over 500 already existing photographs by many different. photographers were selected and sequeoced by Steichen? to express his own concept of universal brotherhood. Though many photographic masterpieces were included: in "The Family of Man," it was the exhibition director, not any of the individual photographers, who was finally responsible for the finished work.

exercise in nostalgla remains to be seen. With the rise of other means for disseminating art information-museum exhibitions publications, films, art courses-its importance as a communication medium has diminished considerably. And, despite some innovations, the new Biennale will retain its outmoded World's Fair system of national pavilions (in which over 30 countries show their separate wares) and, it would seem, its notorious inefficiency of organization.

Nevertheless, the prospect of a real Biennale, a cultural event that also offers maximum opportunity for elbowrubbing is once again giving art worklings the itch to go to Venice. "I hate the idea of the commercial art fairs, such as Basel and Cologue," says Arnold Glimcher, head of the Pace Gallery, who will visit the Biennale for the first time in many years. "They trear art like a country fair, selling it like preserves and lemon pies. But the Biennale sounds like a very lively

Its impact today may be weaker, but the Biennale has provided significant service over the years, both in giving us knowledge about 20thcentury art and in creating a kind of theater that has given such art, at best, a dramatic focus and excitement.

And, from an American point of view, it has provided useful exposure: in 1950 the American pavilion showed the as yet unheralded paintings of Jackson Pollock and Willem de Kooning, and in 1952 and 1958, respectivefor art seems warmer, ... ly, the Americans, Alexander. Rauschenberg won the grand prize for painting, the first time that a young American artist had won such international recognition.

Since 1968, which gave the Biennale's politically-appointed ruling council (of from 20 to 25 members) tha message that some rethinking was in order, there have been attempts at change. The Central Pavilion, in the past devoted solely to Italian art, has become international in scope, and thera has been an effort to engender a sense of greater "participation" on the part of the viewer, a feeling that art can move from its formal exhibition setting into his own "space." At the last big Biennale in 1972, for example, not only was more innovative art encouraged but operations were extended from the Giardini, the public gardens on the Grand Canal where the Biennale holds forth, to the entire city of Venice, with exhibitions in local museums and dozens of big contemporary sculptures temporarily installed in plazas and other open areas.

. The idea this year, too, is to make the Biennale less a show of "merchandise" and more a presenting of experlences in which the viewer may participate. The Biennale fathers are ambitious: within the general theme of "The Environment," the special Biennale shows (besides those mounted by individual countries in their national pavilions) will include:

(1) "Ambiente," a group of environments, brought together by the Italian critic Germano Celant and covering the years from 1915 to the present. The show will include reconstructions of life-size environments by such "old masters" as Mondrian, Man Ray, Marcel Duchamp and the Russian constructivist Vladimir Tatlin, plus more contemporary works by Louise Nevelson, ging"—the innovative Robert and others.

(2) A bistorical archive. comprising an electronic center stocked with information from Europe's major libraries and elaborated to give "the most complete information ever put together in one place" on the cootemporary arts. Hopefully, the project will later be cooverted to a public library.

(3) "International Tendencies," a mélange of "representative" art from 1972-76, comprising the work of 82 artists selected by a committee of six critics and museum men. Among the United States entrants are Larry Bell, Hans Haacke, Edward Kienholz, On Kawara, Brice Marden, Agnes Martin, Dennis Oppenheimer, Ed Ruscha, Allan Shields, Joel Shapiro and "The Fox," a conceptually-oriented art publication that has so far produced only two issues.

(4) "Spain 1936-1976," is a show that will in effect celebrate the end of Franco's rule. It will gather different aspects of Spanish exiles' work including, of course, that of Picasso and Joan Mi-

Among the national pavilions, the British will present a one-man show by Richard Long, a young conceptual artist noted for his evocationa of landscape and "man'a involvement with it." The French show, organized by the critic Pierre Restany at the behest of the cultural section of the Foreign Affairs Ministry, has to do with "sociological" art. Exhibits will include lacerated posters from the 1968 Biennale, by Raymond Hains, symbolic sculptures by Alaio Jacquet based on characters of the Braille alphahet, a meditation garden with ceramics by Jean Pierre Reynaud, and an animation group, working with slides, who will stay outside the pavilion questioning visitors.

As usual, however, the American contribution presents a problem. An adaptatioo of a show at the University of Massachusetts, eoin Americao Art" (see review by Hilton Kramer) it comprises the work of 15 artists, chosen by three critics to reflect "mainstreams in postwar American painting." It doesn't exactly hit the Biennale theme of "The Environment" on the bead, and for good reason. Once again, it represents a last-minute decision on the part of U.S. cultural officials to participate, with the choice of a show made in haste from among several proposed.

There has been grumbling about the show on all sides not only on the grounds that it doesn't tie in with the Biennala theme (there are reports that Biennale administrators plan to protest that) but that, oot specifically assembled for the Biennale, it doesn't represent, to quote one critic, "a cohesive point of view." Nevertheless, regardless of the ahow'a merit and its suitability to Venice, the circumstances of its choice represent a significant improvement in U.S. cultural policy.

Because the United States bas never bad a cultural ministry, as do European countries, our official participation in art exhibitions abroad has been largely a matter of passing the buck. In recent years the buck has stopped at the National Collection of Fire Arts, the lively American art branch of the Smithsonian Institution, headed by Dr. Joshua Taylor.

For some years Taylor has pushed for a broad-based national committee that would give countrywide input and long-range planning-including financial -- to our participation in international sbows. Now at last Taylor's idea has crystallized, with the formation of the Committee on International Exhibitions.

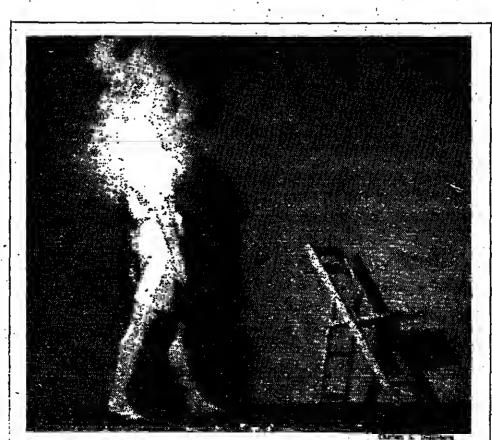

The committee, which works directly with the New York-based exhibition circulating organization, the American Federation of Arts, derives support from the National Endowments for the titled "Critical Perspectives Arts and for the Humanities. with "facilitative assistance" from the Department of State, and the U.S.LA. Hoving of the Metropolitan Museum and Richard Oldenburg of the Modern), the artists George Segal and Dar by Bannard, the art historian-Robert Rosenblum, and Peter Solmsseo, edvisor on the arts to the United States State Department.

The Committee beld its first meeting January 5 and opted to take the Biennale plunge. Forced by the lateness of the hour to pick an existing show, it chose the Amherst exhibition, considered by Taylor "a pretty", good solution." (Other alternatives: the work of the pioneer abstract expressions; painter Clyfford Still, vetoed by the artist himself, and a proposal by the dealer teo. Castelli for an exhibition of blown-up photographs of the work of environmental art ists. No reason was givenfor its refusal, but observers have noted that the show contained a preponderance of artists from Castelli's bwif' stable.)

Because of its late starts-the Committee bas obviously. made a too-hasty choice. Butits formation, which putspolicy and decision-making. into the hands of informed members of the art community, should go a long way toward improving the substance of what we send abroad officially, as we'll as. its financing. (Money for the current Biennale show, about $60,000, comes from that State Department, the U.S.I.A., and the National Endowment on the Arts.)

A New Twist To the Old Awards Game

f there's any field that loves awards more than journalism, it's architecture. Journalism awards are usually a simple, straightforward "good jnb"; architecture awards tend to be fraught with cosmic connotations. Every architecture jury comes up with a "Where are we going?" statement along with the prizes, and an arduous analysis of trends, philosophy, and the present and future state of the building art. "Good job" can signify the direct solution of a basic building problem or the broadest kind of concern about human and environmental impact. How the profession views its peers and its products is one way of reading the times.

...This stock-taking and soul-searching has become atandard in January and May. January brings the annual awards of Progressive Architecture magazine, now approaching their 25th year, which search out winners from the whole spectrum of American architectural practice. May has come to mean the Honor Awards of the American Institute of Architects, given out since 1949, in an ever-increasing range of categories. This year, something new has been added. The Design and Environment Projects, selected by a jury and editors of Design and Environment magazine, is a program with a significantly shifting focus that provokes and requires comment.

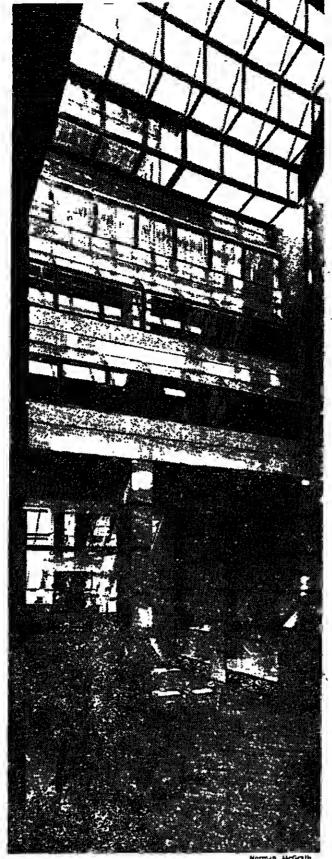

The awards phenomenon is particularly intriguing right now when everyone is looking for signs and portents and all-too-evasive answers about an appallingly imperfect world. Architects find themselves holding the responsibility for a far larger part of that world than they ever thought possible. And so they screen their work for significance, accolades and auguries. The Naked Building has taken its place with The Naked Ape.

For the moment, let us put aside all of those municipal, manufacturers', chamber of commerce, building suppliers' and assorted professional group award programs that produce predictable building "bests" with routine regularity. The first observation to be made about the Design and Environment citations is that there is nothing routine about them in any way. They have come a considerable distance from the practice of giving Joe Architect a prize for a stunning (and photogenic) building that a professional jury admires for assorted technical and esthetic reasons. They represent an offbeat, sometimes slightly forced, but always basically sound attempt to call attention to newly perceived and unconventional aspects of design-from environmental enrichment to activities programs for urban spaces-that are conspicuously neglected in traditional architectural approaches.

Make no mistake; this does not mean that the celebration of architecture as art is over. Every man-jack on architectural juries keeps a spot in his heart and his head for the huilding-as-work-of-art. This is a custom and an achievement almost as old as the history of man. A good architect, if he is honest about it, admires nothing

Jewish Life

This kind of portrait of a large number of people, including action shots and townscapes as well as numerous representations of individuals, was hardly possible before the invention of photography. Portraits of any sort were beyond the means of most people, and the comparatively few painted or sculptured portraits were usually made according to a few simple formulas.

With photography, however, two things happened. Almost overnight the services of a competent portraitist became available to nearly everyone. And, in the 20th century, the few simple poses and gestures of pre-photographic portraiture were enormously enlarged and varied by the ingenuity and abandon of amateur snapshooters and photnjournalists. Thus, the ease and cheapness of photography and the flexibility of approach it encouraged facilitated the development of a new kind of serial or mosaic portraiture in which a curator or. exhibition director combined a number of existing pictures to cover various aspects of the life of a whole people. This is the kind of commemorative portrait that is currectly on view at the Jewish Museum.

At least twn genuine artists of the camera are represented: Roman Vishniac, whose work is already well known in New York, and Alter Kacyzne, whose pictures of schoolchildren and artisans bear comparison with those of Lewis Hine. However, most of the photographers are stylistically if not actually anonymous makers of studio portraits, picture postcards and newspaper photographs. There are stiffly posed group portraits taken against painted backdrops in almost every one of which the edge of the backdrop, and a hit of the studio behind it, are plainly visible. There is a strange newspaper photograph of the funeral of a popular rabbi in Lodz in which the movement of the crowd that jams the street blurs and smears half the faces. There are naively retouched and colored picture postcards that recall an era of popular art that once flourished in this country, too.

The very naiveté and anonymity of the pictures underscores what I take to be one of the major points of this exhibition: the ordinariness of Jewish life in times and places that permit it to be ordinary. For example, there is a publicity shot of a young boxer, the flyweight champion of Poland in 1937, crooching warily hehind gloved hands as hundreds of other young boxers have crouched for the camera. There is another shot of a dark-eyed actress io which the photographer aspired to a dramatic effect of Symbolist or early Expressionist painting. In a third posed photograph the neatly dressed student nurses of Warsaw's Jewish Hospital sit in their cheerfully decorated common room improving their leisure time with

On the contrary. The exhibition a photograph of a lewish chaplain who marches Poland with the Imperial German Army during World War and, with official and popular back Germany, assisted his co-religionists in Poland.

There is nothing in this picture exhibition t the viewer how the happy, peaceful life it come came to a sudden end with the Nazi invasion of in 1939. However, it is quite impossible to view remembering, and this gives a peculiar poignanc show to anyone who has deeply felt the loss of beloved. ## Leeks, Parsnips And Celeriac For Winter variety of fresh vegetebles even in winter. Leeks in Janfor a cock-a-leekie, beets for borscht. Just last month. I was digging up parsnips and salsify that I planted last May.

Most cold-weather crops don't give quick results; they grow slowly toward their late harvest. Leeks, celeriac, parsnips and selsify take longest to grow-about four months -to reach full size.

I have found the secret to success is planting them at the right time. Package directions may say "early spring." I'd say e bit later, after the peas, lettuce and spinach.

Here in suburban Boston. my timing is mid-May. Further south, the time could be a little later - since fall comes leter. My winter crops are planned to reach full size just as their growth would be slowing down or stopping. anyway. Standing in frosty ground through fall, they simply improve in flavor.

The prized edible portion is the root, three to four in diameter, scrape off the brownish skin; the flesh is white and sweet, like a delicate celery. As a cooked vegetable, celeríac is superior to cooked celery which may be coarse and stringy. Use the root to flamots boiled and sliced for salad, alone or with potato or grated raw into salad.

Since the fine seed of celeriac germinates slowly, a protected sowing in a flat inside in April is practical. Or sowing in a short drill outside, cover with a loose hay mulch so the seeds won't

Cards to Save and Savor

By GERALD T. AHNERT

Playing cards were first introduced by the Chinese about 1,000 years ago and they have never lost their popularity even among those who don't care much for card games. Their diversity of design, coupled with their colorful history, bas drawn collectors over many years and in many lands.

Cards were probably first introduced to Europe by Crusaders returning from the Middle East, or by gypsies. The earliest European playing cards, hand-painted works produced for the nobility, were the forerunners of today's playing cards.

It is said that the four suits in a deck of cards represent the four classes of medieval society. The clergy was represented by hearts, the military by spades, the merchants by diamonds, the peasantry by clubs. The four modern symbols for these suits are derived from the earlier Spanish and Italian (hearts), (spades), coins (diamonds), and batons (clubs). Each country in Europe represent-ed the kings, queens and jacks with pictures of their own historical figures.

German playing cards, reproduced from woodcuts and engravings during the late Middle Ages for a time, dominated commercial production. However, this trade was soon taken over by French craftsmen who found they only needed to make one woodcut of a king, one of queen, and one of a knava (jack)—and from these they could print a complete pack of cards by simply stenciling on the different suit marks afterward. The French "mass-produced" cards soon dominated the card-making industry, and their influence as we know it today finally cama into existence. Two critical discoveries made this

The first was the development of a practical, workable method which produced a negative to the camera from which an unlimited number of priots could be made. This was the discovery of William Heory Fox Talbot, who first reported it to the Royal Society of London in January.

The second was the introduction of the half-tooe process which made possible the quick and cheap reproduction of a photograph in confunction with words set in type. The first photograph to be printed in this manner was of Shantytown, a squetter's camp in New York photographed by Heory J. Newton. It appeared in the New York Daily Graphic on March 4, 1880, as a result of Stephen Henry Horgan's experiments.

After these two technical advances laid the foundation for modern visual communication, another major contribution to photo-journalism

The subtle and direct use of photography, emphasizing the inherent characteristics of detail and tonal gradation was part of Edward Weston's approach. But most important for the photojournalist was his insistence in visualizing the final print before making the exposure, Although Weston used an & x 10 camera, this same straightforward technique incorporating the utmost respect for the final image marks the work of a great cootemporary photojournal-Henri Cartier-Bresson,

He must be an artist, a skilled craftsman and a reporter. Today's photographer of news events has risen above the mere button-pusher. He has trained himself to develop an instinctive insight and sensitivity to news events so that his pictures translate the news into human terms and emittonal values which the reader can appreciate.

The most successful oews photographers are those who not only manage to be at the place where the action is taking place, they also must know when to take the picture.

The first week will be the cootest for the Bermuda Bowl, with Italy as defending champion competing with the United States, Brazil, Hong Kong, Australia and Israel, representing their respective zones, North America, South America, the Far East, the South Pacific and Europe. Following that will be the Olympiad with 46 countries in contention. This is the first time, and probably the last time, that two world team champiooshins have been played backto-back. And the Blue Team has to: win them both to maintain its record.

If the Italians bring off this rare double, it will be thanks to the genius and durability of three men, Pietro Forquet of Naples and Giorgio Belladonna and Benito Garozzo of Rome, who have been mainly responsible for their past record. Belladonna has won all 19 titles, Forquet 18 and Garozzo 16. In the 60's Garozzo invariably played with Forquet and more recently with Beliadonna. This time there is a new line-up: Forquet and Belledonna will play together, for the first time on such an occasion, and Garozzo will play with a young but well-established star, Arturo Franco. He was a member of the winning team in 1974 and 1975. and the diagramed deal from a recent Italian trial match is a sample of his skill.

The bidding followed Garozzo's Super-Precision methods, which involve numerous asking bids. One club was strong and artificial, and one spade was a natural positive response. One no-trump asked South about his cootrols, and the response showed a maximum of two kings or one ace in top cards. Two spades was a trump asking bid, inviting South to clarify his spade bolding, and the response promised a fivecard suit with one of the top three honors. Four clubs asked for more information about controls, and the positive response of four hearts showed that South held one king apart from the spads king that North already knew about. Garozzo theo had enough information to venture six spades. West led a low diamond, and Franco did not fancy his chances. There was some possibility of an endplay, however, and he tried for it. He won with the diamond king, drew trumps, and cashed the king and ace of chibs. He ruffed a club, crossed to dummy with a diamond lead and ruffed the last club. The position was then this:

Although the faces or

Other collectors look for entire packs devoted to a special theme such as Tarot decks (commonly known as fortune-telling cards although this deck was originally used to play an Italian gama called tarocchi; the modern joker is a descendant of the Foot in the Tarot pack). Still others collect decks of cards designed for educational purposes, or special commemorative packs such as the Union playing cards of 1862 which used queens as goddesses of liberty, kings as infantry officers and jacks as artillery

In Most Cases It's Not Dirt

BY BERNARD GLADSTONE

When white or light colored paints develop dark looking, discolored stains that look like dirt, more often than not the trouble is not dirt at all-it is mildew. Mildew can develop on painted surfaces only weeks after they have been freshly coated, or it may not show up until two or three years after the paiot has been applied.

Either way, mildew is one of the most persistent and ennoying of all problems coonected with the maintenance of painted surfaces. Aside from its unsightly appear-paint film itself, as well as the development of musty odors and the deterioration of other nearby materials to which it can spread.

Mildew or mold (the names are used almost interchangeably, although mold is the technically correct designation) is a fungus—a micro-scopic form of simple plant life that feeds on aimost any kind of organic material, or on materials made from organic ingredients (paint, leather, wood, cloth, paper, many plastics, etc.). It thrives in almost every part of the country where proper conditions of moisture, food and ance it can also lead to relative warmth can be

Q: We would like to remove the rough surface on our plaster walls, a surface that was created by the application of a sand finish latex interior paint. What method do you recommend?-R.P.M., Flushing, N. Y.

A: This is not an easy job. The only sure cure is to use a sanding machine—preferably a belt sander—to get all of the sand finish material off. If the surface is not too rough there is one other method that many have used to solve this same problem, and that is to cover the surface with lining canvas. This material is sold in all stores that sell wallpaper, and it is hung much like wallpaper. It will go on over a mild sand finish and will leave a fairly smooth surface that can be painted over-but if the old surface is very rough then even this won't work.

Q: My household helper has sprayed e commercial waxbased oil on my dining table for years and now there is a built-up finish that is milky and dull looking. I've tried cigarette ashes and oil, out have only succeeded in small spots. Is there some way I can remove all this to restore the original beauty without damaging the finish?— A.C.T., Amherst. Mass.

A: As a rule you should be able to remove most of the built-up wax by wiping with a rag moistened with paint thinner. However, since I am not sure what kind of finish the table has on it now, I would suggest testing on a small area in an inconspicuous spot first to make certain this will not affect the finish.

Q: My house has cedar slding that was originally stained with a semi-transparent linseed oil base stain, but there are lap marks, streaks and blotches in the finish. The painter blames the stain and the company says the material was improperly applied. We now plan to rectify the situation and would prefer to again use a semitransparent stain. Do you have any suggestions to avoid haviog this happeo agaio?—Dr. A.I.F., Watchung, N. J.

A: This type of stain is not really a stain in the true sense of the word-it is more of a thinned-down paint and is not really transparent. If the new material is properly stirred (to make sure it is of uniform consistency from top to bottom of each can) and then applied without thinning and without trying to spread it too far, you should have no problem-but you probably will need two coats premature breakdown of the found, and reproduces at an astonishing rate from spores which are carried through the sir. Although there are about 100,000 different kinds of fungl known, only one (called pullularia) disfigures and destroys paint by actually eating its way into and eeding on the film. It can only grow-when moisture is present (usually from damp air or dew on the surface) and when temperatures are reasonably warm (like in spring and summer). Around the outside of the house these conditions are most likely to be found in shaded or partially protected areas where the sun does not reach often and where surfaces stay wet longer after a damp spell; on the inside it most often occurs in kitchens, bathrooms and laundry rooms where interior humidity is often high and where ventilation is usually inadequate. Unfortunately many homeowners (and some professional painters) do not recognize mildew as such and, thinking that it is dirt, they merely paint over the surface (often without even washing it). This not only does not eliminate the problem, it may even make it worse. Since fungus is a growth, it merely starts catiog its way into the "fresh food" provided for it (the new paint) and often works its way back out to the surface in short order-often with a more massive growth than was visible originally.

Therefore the first step in combatting this problem is to determine whether or not the discoloration is actually mildew, and if it is, take the necessary corrective measures (if it's just dirt, then it still should be scrubbed off before repainting to prevent peeling).

Although the only completely certain way to detect mildew is to have it analyzed in the laboratory, there is one fairly simple test that any homeowner can make that is accurate in the vast majority of cases. Wet a clean rag with household laundry bleach (such as Clorox), then wipe this lightly over the stained or discolored area. If it is mildew it will disappear almost completely in short order; if it is dirt it will not (the bleach must be fresh for this test).

Once it has been determined that mildew is actually the problem, then the first step is to kill it on the surface by washing with a solutioo made by mixing one cup of fresh bleach with three cups water, to which is added about one cup of a powdered detergent containing trisodium phosphate (Soilax is one of the best known brands). This solution should be scrubbed on with a soft bristle brush, then rinsed off with plenty of Continued on Page 38

Interphil 76 Is Almost Here

Interphil 76, an internationai philatelic exhibition taking place when the host country is celebrating one of the most momentous events of its history, the 200th anniversary of its independence, is now only one month eway. Heralded as the greatest stamp show ever presented in the United States, it is taking place in Philadelphia. where in 1776 the new Amerlcan nation was born. The show will run for nine days, from Saturday, May 29 through Sunday, June 6.

An international philatelie exhibition is held in the U. S. once every 10 years, always in a year that ends with a six. It is superspecial and wherever it is held, in the U.S. or elsewhere, it has the dimensions and grandeur that make it the biggest stamp show in the world.

Interphil is being presented in the Exhibition Halls of the Philadelphia Civic Center, a site the size of a few football fields. There are approximately 180,000 square feet of space for exhibits, as well as conference halls, film screening rooms and restaurants. The Exhibition Halls are air-conditioned 24 hours a day and artificially lighted, to eliminate any hazards from sunlight or changes in temperature to the precious stamps that will be on

The international exhibition, the seventh held in this country, will feature some 3,300 frames measuring 3 by 4 feet, each accommodating 16 album pages in the 9-by-1114-inch size. The frames will be on display in categories of a Court of Honor, Honor Class and competitive classes. The exhibits are certain to be of the kind seen ooce in e decade. Just to enter the competition an exhibit had to have won a gold award.

An International Pavilion will display the official government exhibits, including those of a number of U. S. agencies, and provide sales space for the U. S. Postal Service and the 35

There will be 120 dealer booths, with representation from the foremost dealers of the U.S. and abroad. For example, the noted firm of Stanley Gibbons, Ltd. of London which proclaims itself the world's oldest and largest, will bring to Philadelphia a unique unused block of eight of France's 1-franc vermilion of 1849, worth $275,000; a fine used block of four of Nova Scotia's 6pence yellow green of 1851, valued at $15,000; plus Europe's two rarest stamps, Hungary's 1 krajczar and 2 krajczar newspaper tax stamps of 1868. There is no question about the dealers going all out in the wares they put forward, for they are expending between $4,000 and $15,000 each for expenses for the show. There is certain to be a number of the rerest of rarities. There will be super auctions where the minimum lot value will run $100 and up. One firm is reported to be bringing more Zeppelin covers than have ever been seen before among the 250,-000 U. S. first-day covers it is bringing to the exhibition.

There will be 65 lectures during the course of the exhibition, all free. Visitors will be able to enter the lecture rooms without paying admission to the exhibition, according to an Interphil statement. The lectures, all by experts in their field, will run through the gamut of philatelic interests, as indicated by the following sampling of subjects.

"A Short History of the American Revolution As Shown by U. S. First-Day Covers," "1968 Christmas Huck Press Plating," "History of Israel-Airmail Cov-ers," "Russia No. 1," "Postal History of the Confederacy,

The Grand Prize of Honor will be Excelibur, a miniature sterling sliver sword thrust into a block of cut crystal that can be withdrawn for use as a letter opener. The Grand Prize National will be a sliver punch bowl set. The Grand Prize International (Western Hemisphere) will be a sterling silver key, an exact reproduction of the key used to unlock the main door of Independence Hall, with all imperfections of the original recreated. The Grand Prize International (Rest of the World) will be a silver inkstand, including quill stand, sand shaker and inkwell, exactly the size of the one in Independence Hali.

There will be a number of special events during the nine days of the show, beginning with an opening night champagne reception in the setting of the "Great Stair Hall" of the Philadelphia Museum of Art. at 2 P.M. Saturday; all sessions will take place in the hotel's Manhattan - Skyline Suits. Copies of the illustrated catalogue will be available at the auction registration

An equally if not more important sign of a convention's "bigness" is the stature of the speakers on the panel of the traditional educational forum. The Greater New York convention's forum will have four widely recognized authorities - the moderator and three panelists. The moderator is Edward

Schuman of Miami. He is executive vice president of the American Israel Numismatic Association, the sponsor of the convention. A former New Yorker, he served bere as president of the Brooklyn Coin Club, the Queens County Coin Club, and the Great Eastern Numismatic Association. Moving to Florida eight years ego, he continued his involvement in the hobby and has served as president of. the Israel Numismatic Society of Greater Miami. He is currently president of the South Florida Coin Club. .. One of the panelists is Henry Grunthai, equally well known in Europe and the United States through his long service with the American Numismatic Society; be retired from his post as curator three years ago. Aware of the steadily growing interest in medal collecting, he will present a color-slide-illustrated talk on 'Richard Wagner in Medallic Art."

The second panelist is Gene. Hessler, former curator of the Money Museum of the Chase Manhattan Bank and still in charge of the bank's numismatic collection; he is also familiar as the author of the prize-winning book, "A Comprehensive Guide to U.S. Paper Money." His educational forum presentation is entitled, "Some Firsts, in American Numismatics." The final panel member, David Armet, is a medal-collecting specialist of long standing, and a member of the American Numismatic Society's curatorial Committee on Decorations and Awards. His slide-illustrated topic is . The Heraldry of Heroism: The Story of Military Decorations."

The educational forum is scheduled for 7:30 P.M. on Friday. Unfortunately, this is in conflict with the second session of the convention.

A number of special-interest groups, such as the Metropolitan Area Token and Medal Society, the New York unit of the Young Numismatists of America and the American Israel Numismatic Association, will hold meet-

To Probe $2 Bill Ads

David McDonald, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Enforcement, Operational and Tariff Affairs, has announced that his office has requested a Federal Trade Commission investigation into certain advertising promotions for the $2 bill which was reintroduced into circulation April 13. His official announcement follows: "The Columbia Mint of Washington, D.C. ran several full-page advertisements in nationally distributed newspapers, beginning on March 28, advertising the sale of 'official' first-day-of-issue $2 bill philatelic-numismatic folio collectors items. The items offered by the Columbia Mint are in no way connected with the Department of the Treasury. The department neither encourages nor endorses the sale of these items, Because the Columbia Mint's advertisements state that the firm is issuing the $2 bill-folios through the cooperation of the Treasury Department, I have referred this matter to the Federal Trade Commission for consideration and review of the possibility of misleading advertising."

ings and workshops during the convention An up-to-theminute schedule of these and other special events should be available at the main convention registration desk.

Canadian 'Giant'

An outstanding collection of Canadian and world coins, tokens and paper money, assembled over a period of four decades by Canadian industrialist John L. McKay-Clements, will be offered for sale during the 14th annual convention of the Ontario Numismatic Association May 13-16 in the Westbury Hotel in Toronto. The collection numbers well over 8,000 pieces, apportioned into more than 2.500 lots. The mail-andfloor-bid sale will occupy three sessions-on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, May 13-

15. each starting at 7 P.M.

A specimen of the "almost unique" 1911 Canadian pattern silver dollar (only two specimens are believed to ex-Ist) is the undisputed highlight of the auction. A close second is the "king of Canadian coins issued for circulation," the 1921 half dollar. Other notable offerings are an uncirculated 1921 Canadian nickel, a number of gold coin rarities, an extensive run of early provincial tokens and French regime issues, and a collection of more than 1,300 bank notes.

The auction is being is being conducted by Frank Rose Enterprises, Ltd., Suite 1000, 347 Bay Street, Torooto, Ontario, M5H 2R7, Canada. Interested collectors can write or phone (416-863-1559) now for a free copy of the illustrated auction catalogue.

The exotic animal coins of Guyana

A special first-year-of-issue Proof Set of the redesigned monetary coins of Guyana (formerly British Guiana).

This set is available only until May 26, 1976. ... Guyana Independence Day

In 1976, the nation of Guyana is celebrating its tenth anniversary of independence.

To honor the occasion, the Government of Guyana has authorized redesign of the nation's monetary coins. And special first-year-of-issue Proof Sets of the new tenth anniversary coins are now available to collectors-for a very brief period of time.

The six distinctive coins featured in this special Proof Set all portray exotic wild animals native to this beautiful land located on the north central coast of South America. The new One Dollar coin, for instance, depicts the alligatorlike Caiman, which grows to a spectacular 151/2 feet in length and battles primarily large animals which are capable of giving it a real struggle. The Fifty Cent coin shows the Conje Pheasant, which is regarded as one of the missing links in the evolution of birds from reptiles-a remarkable creature whose young have temporary claws on their wings, enabling them to climb trees!

And the Twenty-five Cent coin portrays the Harpy Eagle, one of the strongest birds of prey in all the world. The Sakiwinki, a delicate, furry monkey capable of amazing leaps from tree to tree, appears on the Ten Cent coin. The Jaguar, the most feroclous cat in the Western Hemisphere, is shown on the Five Cent coin. And the One Cent coin depicts the huge but gentle Manatee-the "Sea Cow"whose fondness for water plants is such that it can be heard feeding at a distance of 200 yards. The reverse of the 1976 coinage carries Guyana's Coat of Arms which emphasizes the country's abundant agricultural and mineral resources, as well as its intriguing plants and animals.

The Special six-coin Proof Sets of the exotic animal coins of Guyana will be issued in strictly limited edition. The total number of these sets will be permanently limited to the exact number ordered by May 26, 1976-the tenth anniversary of the day on which Guyana achieved its independence.

The number of special Proof Sets that any one collector may order is limited to four. Each of these sets will contain the six coins described in this announcement and will be issued in a deluxe presentation case. A Certificate of Authenticity will accompany each set.

Those who wish to acquire this special Proof Set of the new 1976 coins of Guyana may do so by using the order form below.

If not, the same conditions that originally caused the mildew to grow on that surface will probably cause it to start growing again so waiting weeks to paint may have given the spores a chance to settle in and they will then show up after the surface is paint-

Most modern paints have some mildewcide added to help them resist attack by fungi, but the amount is for normal conditions only and is seldom enough to resist growth in cases where severe infestations previously exist-ed. That is why it is best to buy a good qualify paint, but then add additional mi-dewcide before using it (some local paint companies will make up special orders of paint with extra mildewcide added, but usually not in quantities small enough for the everage bomeowner).

The most widely used chemical mildeweide used to be a mercury compound, but in recent years the Environmental Protection Agency has taken strong steps to limit the use of these compounds, and it is now practically benned as a paint mildewcide. Narrowly and technically, there is little "archit, here at all. And yet the winners, while they include specialized designers and landscape firms, form a rot some of the country's finest practitioners. Associates knits together the high-rise towers of Nev York's Battery Park City plan by using the "negative of the space between the buildings as the design catalyst for an attractive and livable setting.

When dealing in the more conventional stuff of building, the emphasis is often on the role of zoning financing for the creation of public amenity, rather the making of a monument. New York's luxury Galle tower by David Kenneth Specter is lauded for its spec urban spaces, made possible by the city's adoption o mixed-use zoning. Perfectly ordinary old buildings in and Chicago are commended for the remodeling that saved and upgraded them and their communities while keeping their residents in place.

None of this is the kind of thing found in archit histories. Neither iconography nor immortality is serv Jonathan Barnett, the former bead of New York City' innovative Urban Design Group and the director of graduate program in urban design at the City Colleg-City University, sums up the point of view. "The preof improving our environment, the physical surround that we live with every day, is the central design issue of our times."

Agreed. At the same time, may I offer three quie cheers for the American Institute of Architects' insist still, in its Honor Awards, that the building solution deserves to be considered as a statement of esthetic e ... intellectual clarity and architectural art. They are qualities found within the economic constraints of an apartment complex, such as Davis, Brody and Associat Waterside in New York, or the costly sophistication ( private bouse by Richard Meier and Associates that is as much e design statement as a home.

These suave, specialized appeals to the senses and intelligence offer rewards to the spirit that are not cant out or diminished by the new and necessary environmen awareness. On rare occasions, as in the beautifully ref solutions of this year's special award firm, Mitchell-G. they coexist. And the A.L.A. has conscientiously exten: its awards categories to make that possible.

The fact is that the scope of architectural practics today is almost shattening in its potential and demand climate is not one of decline, in spite of the superficial signposts of a maifunctioning economy and the new-ch abdicated ideals. We are actually at a new frontier. Th ewards programs are defining the way shelter now serves and expresses the standards of society. Architect don't just design; they agonize. They worry about their art and the world.

Equisetum tea is good for mildew on roses and vegetahles. Horseradish controls fungus, too, but make the tea quite stong and steep it half an hour.

The poisonous plant called angel's trumpet, thorn apple or jimson weed (Daturo) repels Japanese beetles, especially when planted near roses, grapes and corn. Datura has been used in Mexico for generations. It is pounded and smeared on floors to control various invading insects, including lice. Gardeners who grow roses usually spend e great deal of time and effort oo them not because they must but because they want to. There also are those gardeners who have learned to get the most out of their roses with the least time and effort. I am one of them. Although roses are popular for their abundant June bloom with intermittent displays in summer and a final burst of color in fall, if unprotected, they can succumh to insects and diseases that can wipe out bloom for the rest of the year. Protection should start when any of the new rose foliage assumes normai size.

The most important piece of equipment the rose grower can own is a sprayer. (Dust, while easier to use, does not provide complete coverage and therefore cannot provide complete protec-

There are two rules for spraying that must be obeyed. One. Always spray the top and undersides of the foliage. To neglect this is to miss areas where some insects lurk and where some fungi germinate. Two. The foliage must be sprayed every seven days, If spraying is not possible for some reason on the seventh day, do it on the eighth, minth or tenth day. The regularity of the spray schedule is just as important as the spray materials that are used, because rose diseases are not "cured"; they are prevented.

The forceful action of the spraying operation washes many insects off the plant, such as aphids in spring and fall and red spider mites (on the underside of the leaves) during the hot, dry summer. Sioce mildew troubles only certain varieties, some gardeners purchase the mildewresistant roses and no chemical protection is required.

The more troublesome fungus is blackspot. No modern .. rose is immune to it. If the disease is severe enough, it: can be the indirect death of the plant. When the fungus germinates, it is clearly evident by the black spots (with fringes) on the leaves. Badly infected leaves may then turn yellow and fall

Blackspot begins to appear in late June and if the foliage is not protected, it will travel ? from one leaf to another and from one plant to another. As the disease continues to make inroads, there will be fewer and perhaps no roses at all in the summer and the fall. The defoliated plant, exposed to the winter in its weakened condition, will sustain severe winter damage and may be killed.

There are products available that can prevent hlackspot altogether. In my experience the best fungicide for blackspot, is Phaltan (folpet) but Captan and Fermate (ferbam) are almost as effective. All three of these fungicides will give complete protection, bowever, regardless of which is used, provided the gardener stays faithfully with the seven to 10 day spraying ing oo the susceptibility of the variety. A scab disease can be recognized when leaves have dull smoky areas on leaves that turn to olive green blotches. Varieties such as Almey, Hopa, Jay Darling and Swarthmore are very susceptible. Rust, a very severe disease oo the Bechtel crab, can be recognized by small orange areas on leaves and fruits. Fire blight, a bacterial disease, causes sudden wilting, dying and blackening of new shoots. The Redbud, Tea, and Van Eseltine crab apple varieties are very susceptible to this disease.

For scab, benomyl, captan, or dodine sprays are good and when rust is a problem zineb or maneb can be added to the spray. Apply the fungicides when a one-half inch green leaf tissue appears on the buds and at 10-day intervals until 2 weeks after petal fall. For fire blight, steptomycin .sprays at early, mid-, and later flowering stages are helpful.

Leaf blight is a perennial problem on suspectible hawthorn trees. Small reddish brown spots occur on newly expanded leaves, followed by yellowing and premature leaf drop. Often trees are completely defoliated by mid-

Such trees usually survive but are unsightly. Trees can be protected with zineb, maneb, or benomyl sprays at bud-break and 10 and 20 days later. Certain hawthorn varieties are also susceptible to rust which causes severe deformation of leaves, twigs, and fruit. Tiny whitish growths of the rust fungus cause the deformation. Zineb or maneb applications at the same time as for scab control will stop the disease.

Anthracnose usually occurs each year on sycamore and certain London plane trees. It has been an increasing problem on maple, oak, sweetgum and ash. The first formed leaves of sycamore when diseased appear frozen and soon drop. A browning along the leaf veins is noticeable. Also, dieback of young limbs can occur when the disease is severe.

Most fungicidal sprays are ineffective in controlling the disease but fortunately the fertilization program for the disease is usually not serious enough to cause lasting dam- of the disease.

A disease oo borse chestrut is characterized by rather large reddish brown blotches with yellow borders on the This leaf blotch disease has been common lately. The control is the same as for bawthorn leaf spot. It is usually not ecooomically practical to spray large trees

Mountain Ash leaf spot is characterized by small brown spots oo the leaflets and when severe can cause defoliation. Trees will vary in susceptibility. The disease control is the same as for hawthorne leaf spot.

Leaf blister on oaks has been prevalent for two years and if the weather is moist during spring and early summer this year, the disease should be noticeable. Circular, raised, wrinkled yellowish-white areas up to one-half inch in diameter occur oo the upper leaf surfaces. Young trees can be protected with sprays of maneb or zineb at bud swell time.

Also, Actinopelte leaf spot of white and red oaks, which can also appear on maple. red bud, and sweetgum has been more prevalent. As yet it has oot been practical to apply sprays to control this

Pine tip blight and spruce dieback are increasing. Tip blight causes a browning of young expanding needles, especially when growth is plush, and is most serious oo Austrian, red, Scotch and mugho pines. Spray applications of benomyl just before the new needles emerge from the sheath will help control this disease. Spruce dieback is characterized by a cracking or cankering of the wood where the fungus gains access. The needles turn brown and affected limbs soon die.

Fungicide sprays have not been too helpful, but pruning of affected limbs an inch or two below the cankers, when practical, will help reduce disease spread.

Most of the above mentiooed fungus or bacterial diseases are influenced by prolonged moist springs. However, canker and wilt diseases of many of common shade trees are not directly influenced by this condition. The pathogens for these diseases are in the soil and penetrate the roots or are carried by insects or pruning tools and ere directly introduced into the tree.

Wilt diseases, such as Dutch elm disease of American elm and Verticillium wilt of maple are perennial problems. The leaves of affected elm limbs will turn yellow and wilt before falling or may fall suddenly while still green. A brown discoloration develops in the outer layers of saperood just under the bark of affected limbs. Sanitation practices, by pruning out affected limbs and removal of heavily infected trees, will reduce disease spread. Injection of elms with certain soluble fungicides when the disease is first noticed has shown promise. This method is not available for homeowner application as yet. A sudden wilting or dying of the leaves on one or more branches of maple is characteristic of Verticillium wilt. Trees with several dead branches may die. A brown discoloration of the sapwood occurs also. Pruning of the affected limbs and a good tree has reduced the effect

MICRO-PLEX is a micronutrient. Micro means "very smalt". Nutrient denotes "food". Even though required in small amounts, they still play a major role in plant growth and development.

Green Thumb gardeners know that healthy plants: need nitrogen, chosphorus, potassium and lime. You may not knew that these alone don't furnish a balanced diet, and that MICRO-PLEX is what you need to help them work better, faster.

MICRO-PLEX is a balanced formula, readily absorbed by lawns and leaf surfaces. With MICRO-PLEX, grass stays greener, plants develop resistaance to disease and insects. Ornamentals produce healthier growth, more blooms

Tomatoes, Eggplants and Peppers

By ELDA HARING

The solanums, pepper, eggplant and tomato, have much in common. They are all fin weather vegetables and should not be planted until wil danger of frost has would be stunted by long periods of chilly weather.

A good rula is to plant these vegetables when oak leaves have fully expanded. Noss are too fussy as to soil and they grow well in a pH range of 6 to 7. Since crop is produced over a long period, deep, rich soil and an abundance of water and fertilizer low in nitrogen will be important through tha

Plants may he grown at home from seed sown six to eight weeks before time to plant them outdoors. This should not be attempted, unless there is full sun so the seedings may develop rapidly. later to the strongest plant. Homegrown seedlings are tender and must be exposed gradually to outside conditions to harden them before planting outside. Put them in an open coldframe or a covered porch or patio or in some other protected spot for a few days before planting time. Check them daily, for on hot windy days, the seedlings will dry out drasti-

The solanums need a good nich soil to bear well but too much nitrogen late in the season will delay the fruiting period. For a good start, break up the soil in the bottom of each planting hole, mix it with a shovelfull of commercially dried cow manure, compost and/or peat moss plus one half cup of bonemeal or superphosphate.

If the soil is very fertile, no supplemental feeding would be needed unless excess rainfall has depleted the available nitrogen. In our garden, we use a side dressing of a complete fertilizer low in nitrogen, such as 5-10-5 two or three times during the growing seasoo.

When setting the plants, place them as deeply as possihle up to the second set of leaves. They will develop roots up and down the stems giving them a stronger base to resist winds and adverse weather conditions.

These vegetables need warm, summer weather to produce good crops. They require plenty of moisture especially when fruit is setting. Water them deeply once a week if showers do not prevail and if weather is hot. windy and dry. Mulching is important to conserve moisture, restrain weeds and keep the fruit free of dirt.

An ideal and economical mulch is grass clippings spread in successive layers betweeo rows or around individual plants. Straw, peat moss and pine needles also are good mulch for vegetab-the weather is over 85 and too dry they may drop their small fruits. However, they will set fruit later if weather is to their liking. They also oeed moisture at all times. Rotenone dust will control aphids that spread a disease known as pepper mosaic which causes mottling of the leaves and stunted plants.

Tomatoes prefer temperatures in a range of 70 to 90 to set fruit. They will not set fruit below 60 or if the temperatures exceed 95 for any length of time. Watch out for the tomato born worm who will skeltonize the leaves, Although three inches long and a halfinch thick, he is difficult to see as he is the same color as the leaves. not to the extravagant degree that celery does. Hoe lightly between the plants to keep the soil from crusting.

Leeks, too, are a delicacy. For winter use, sow seed inside in a flat or outside in a short drill. Transplant seedlings in May. For fall use, seedlings should be transplanted earlier, in April.

Leeks are set in a trench, six to eight inches deep, that is gradually filled in. Or they can be set at or oear the surface. For the loog white seem that supposedly enhan-ces the mild onion flavor, the plants should be hilled about their base.

Leeks and celeriac are good companions. Both like rich soil, moist but well-drained. Their shapes fit well together, with the slender upright leeks between rows of hushy

Parsnips and salsify are roots in a class with carrots. Use either or both in beef stew. I cook and mash parsnips with potato, or parboil parsnips then slice and fry them. The two vegetables have similar white or pale beige roots, average length eight to ten inches. Salsify is thinner Their foliage is edible; parsnip's resembles celery leaves, salsify has bladelike

Another Upheaval Rocks the Big Board

Y VARTANIG G. VARTAN

Can a 66-year-old former rchandiser save the emittled citadel of capitalism? That is the question posed the forced resignation last the lorest resignation last esday of James J. Needn, 49, after 43 stormy linths as chairman of the w York Stock Exchange.
The lorest resignation last esday of James J. Needlast esday of sten, a seasoned director stands and the Big Board, an ex-chair-ing of the J. C. Penney Company and a prestigious memory and a prestigious memory.

However, some observers believe that no man-not even Hercules in a threepiece suit—could bave pre-vailed against the mood in Washington and among institutional stock purchasers to forestall such momentous de-

"He blew a few," sald one director after Mr. Needham agreed to bow out. "In the end, he wasn't the right man at the right time."

Thus it was that the Big Board's governing body, driven by a sense of urgency, reached into its own ranks to pick Mr. Batten as its new leader. He is a low-key, bard-toiling executive with a passion for planning who has spent four years on the ex-change's board.

"He represents what the exchange must have," de-clared Robert H.P. Baldwin, president of Morgan Stanley & Co. and one of the exchao-ge's 21 directors. "He bas no ax to grind. He has great credibility in the corporate and institutional worlds and, I suspect, in Washington."

Mr. Batten has something else going for him. Working quietly behind the scenes, ba has set firm priorities for the 184-year-old exchange. The world's largest, it transacts 85 percent of all stock trading in the United States. Mr. Needham, whose style was to shoot from the bip decision - making and ose membership kept whose membership changing its own signals in the most frustrating manner, never succeeded in lining up a set of firm priorities.

Even before being named to the job, Mr. Batten had turned his attention to the Achilles heel of the ex-change. For decades the charges of "private club" have centered on the specialists, those floor members re-sponsible for making orderly markets in assigned stocks.

As the bead of a special committee, Mr. Batten recommended earlier this year that a major overhaul be un-dertaken of the time-honored procedures for allocating stocks to specialists.

These recommendations call for tough new standards -the awarding and retention of stocks allocated to specialists on a competitiva basisas well as more intensive evaluation of specialist performance. As the "Batten Report" points out, improved

Two decades sgo, as a rising executive at Penney's, Mr. Batten headed a task force that analyzed long-range goals for the retail chain and expanded it successfully into bard-goods and new merchandising techniques. Just as that report eventually helped Mr. Batten land the top spot at Penney's, so did the analysis of the specialist system prove to fellow directors that was the man for the job at the Big Board.

Related to improving the specialist system is a top-priority obective that the Batten report states in these terms:
'To improve upon exchange market-making capability to assure its position as tha leading market for equity se-

What this means in simpla terms is to preserve the auction market, wherein buyers and sellers of stocks meet on the exchange floor.

The situation is urgent now because of a March, 1977, deadline imposed by Congress for setting up a central market system that would al-low stock exchanges and other broker-dealers across tha country to compete with each other through some kind of electronic communications.

Thus, Mr. Batten's own performance will be judged on his success, during a ten-ure of perhaps two or three years, in preserving Big Board dominance in a netional market system.

The stakes are enormous and ultimately they come down to Wall Street's favorits commodity—money. Last year, for example, member firms of the New York Stock Exchange raised their net earnings after taxes to a rec-ord $414.7 million. In the light of thesa buge profits, an outsider legitimately might ask: "Why force out Mr. Needham when business is ao good?"

The common reply in tha
Exchange community is that "Needham falled to deliver." Falled, that is, to resolve in favor of the Big Board the critical issues that festered for several years before he even arrived on the scenesuch as commission rates, market fragmentation and demands for reform from Congress and tha S.E.C.

In retrospect, one critical failing of Mr. Needham-who is a stocky, handsome, authoritative man who played college football and later becama an accounting-firm partner—was that he as-aumed his post in August of 1972 without any real power base and be never managed to establish one.

At least five men before him bad turned down the job
—an indication that it was a no-win situation-but he accepted it eagerly as an of-fer be could not afford to refuse. It propelled him from a $38,000 annual salary and relative obscurity as a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission into the national limalight.

Ha negotiated a lucrativa contract reputedly worth $300,000 a year through Feb-ruary, 1978. (Under an arrangement described as "gen-erous," Mr. Needham will continue to be compensated through the remainder of tha period.) The new Blg Board chief reveled in his new-found prominence and dashed around the country making speeches. Ha moved the exchange's monthly hoard meetings to such other cities

He has already-invested at least $150 million his jungle venture. After mais years at has of yet turned a dollar in profits. And since ry little chance he will recover this vast

His Amazon estate, called the Jari Forestry i Reaching Company, spreads across more n 3 million acres not quite as large as Anneticut and Rhode Island combined; more n three times the size of the giant King d of secrecy that would have met with r approval of the late Howard Hughes. ew outsiders have been invited to set foot Jari-a Brazilian president, a handful of ikers, soma businessmen. Local politicians aplain that they have no access to their stituents among the 20,000 people—workand their family members—who live at into Dourado, the jungle city that Mr. Lud-

You should think of Ludwig as a bulk shipper," he said. "He just seems to be looking for bulks to produce and ship. Thanks to the Amazon, Jarl can plug into this network pretty easily. And, I think, it was the first thing he looked for."

But there is little doubt that the jungla kingdom has become his favorite project in the twilight of his life. "He talks about Jari with more enthusiasm and detail than about all his tankers and mines," said a Brazilian businessman who has

The soil itself presents another serious problem. Despite the intense vegetation of the Amazon, there is only a thin layer of fertile ground that does not lend itself easily to agriculture or reforestation.

Mr. Ludwig's investigators decided that an Asian species, Gmelina Arborea, which was successfully transplanted to Africa, and a Caribbean pine, brought over from Honduras, were most suitable for Jari-the former yielding hardboard, veneer and pulp; the latter, pulp, plywood and lumber.

Thus far, Mr. Ludwig has stripped 250,000 acres and replanted tha two imported species. The gmelina, particularly, has reportedly ta-ken well, and the first batch of trees, which take about 10 years to reach commercial value, should be ready by 1978.

By then, Mr. Ludwig plans to float in the first Japanese plywood factory, it is believed. "They won't be the largest in the world, but they will be pretty close to it," said one man who has followed the Jari project closely.

Inflation That Wasn't Bred at Home

Sources of the Double-Digit.

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.

WASHINGTON - Now that washing on — Now that the dust has settled on the calamities that befell the last few years, it is possible to perceive a striking feature of the episode that was not altogether understood at the altogether understood as intime.

It involves the nature of the stunning, doubled-digit inflation, which in turn was a major cause of the recession.

The inflation turns out to have been unique for this country, not only in its magnitude but in its causes, and there is no good reason to there is no good reason to think it will be repeated. In brief, the 1973-74 infla-tion was the first in this country to reflect primarily international causes — and not the familiar erray of domestic factors that have been wrangled over for Both economic analysis and general opinion have for a long time attributed imilation —a rise in the general price level—to some combination of four domestic causes. There has been hot debate about the importance of each, but the following four encompassed the entire range of villains:

Big deficits in the Federal budget.

9A Federal Reserve monetary policy permitting a too-rapid growth of the money supply (sometimes associated with budget deficies).

¶A rise in wages, spurred in good part by union power, faster than the growth of productivity.

¶The wielding of "pricing power" on the part of much of industry, a phenomenon with several names such as oligopoly, conceotrated industries, administered prices and the like.

The fascinating thing about the recent round of double-digit inflation is that not one of these things, or even a combination of them, offers a good explanation.

No doubt the $14 billion budget deficit in fiscal year budget deficit in fiscal year 1973 was a little bigger than it ought to have been in an expanding economy with fairly high employment and a high degree of industrial capacity utilization.

No doubt the 9 percent growth of the money supply "M-1, narrowity defined" during 1972 was higher than it ideally should have been.

But it is highly doubtful that these marginal errors of flation from 3 percent in 1972 to 9 perceot in 1973 and 12 percent in 1974. Besides, the budget deficit all but vanished in fiscal 1974 and monetary growth slowed io 1973 and 1974.

Wages, it is almost universally agreed, reacted to infla-tion in this period, with a lag, and were not a primary cause. As for corporate pric-ing power, as measured by what shows up in profits, the performance by any realistic measure was dismal-again an almost unchallenged coo-

In fact, there were price and wage controls in the 1972-73 period, They were fi-nally abandoned in early 1974, in good part because they could oot be effective in the face of the extraordi-nary set of international forces - four of them - at

The first is entirely familiar —oil. The quadrupling of world crude oil prices in the winter of 1973-74 was an event without parallel in economic history, and it had a direct, measurable effect on price indexes in the United States. Gasoline prices went up faster than electric utility prices, but in the end all fuelrelated prices went up a lot. Another jump of that winter's magnitude is most un-likely to happen again.

The second, also very fa-miliar, was food. Here, an explosion of world demandnot only Soviet demand, though that was important. —for American food, mainly grains, quickly exhausted surplus stocks and coincided with one of the worst strokes of had luck this country has experienced: the bad harvest of 1974. The results were

The consumer price index for food at home (bought in the stores) rose from 124.1 in December 1972 to the peak of 180.9 in December 1975. an increase of 46 percent in three years. The index has since declined a little and the great surge of prices is clearly over, although food prices will probably drift upward again in the future. Grain prices rose a bit on commodity markets last week after the announcement of further Soviet corn and wheat purchases. But now there is a bilateral Unit-ed States-Soviet agreement setting limits on these purchases, and the big price im-pacts of the past are not like-ly to be repeated. The third international force was the depreciation of the value of the dollar on world markets in the 1971-73 period. This not only in-creased the cost of imports but, equally important, pro-duced a strong extra demand for our exports at a time: when production capacity was fairly tight. Ecocomists almost univer-

The fourth force is associated with the third, it might be called "the death throes of Bretton Woods"the last agomes of the sys-tem of fixed currency ex-preserve a fixed extrate for the dollar.

The rapid Saudi inflation pushes up contractors' administrative costs and the cost of housing noo-Saudi employees tripled in many cases in 1975. The cost of building materials doubled over the past two years. Western businessmen estimate as they. complain about price gouging from suppliers.

It also costs at least twice as much to buy new equip-ment here as in the United States and sometimes more than three times as much And spare parts are specta-cularly difficult and expensive to come by.

As for delays, some construction experts here say it takes two and a half times as long to get work done in Saudi Arabia as in the eastern United States.

An ordinary general-cargo freighter waits 120 to 150 days at sea before it can tie up at the Jeddah port area—and the port's operations are interrupted by wandering cattle and time out for prayers by pious Moslem employees.

Perini's recent contracts in New York City have included $280 million for work on sewage treatment facilities on the West Side of Manhattan near 135th Street, and lengthy sewer tuonels oo the West Side. #### The woman on the left has a very complex payroll.

The man who makes it seem simple is her bank.

The woman on the left is Laury Ford, director of The Laury Girls, Inc., a temporary secretarial service that has grown more than 100 times in size since it started in 1968.

The man who helped Mrs. Ford's business become a leader in its field is her bank. He's Bill Barr of Chemical Bank. Bill's a payroll management specialist, part of our network of Chemical Bankers who specialize in business as well as banking.

"It would cost us three times as much to manage our payroll ourselves."

"The Laury Girls is different from most businesses," Mrs. Ford said. "The very guts of our business is our payroll. The people we send out on jobs can work as little as four hours or as long as a year and a half, and still be considered temporary. And although we're paid irregularly, we pay our people weekly. Every week's payroll is different. So you can see, our payroll is extremely complex.

"I don't believe we would have made it without Chemical's payroll management system," Mrs. Ford added. "Chemical processes our payroll, supplies the checks so they can be cashed at any branch and reconciles our payroll account. And that's the easy part. Chemical also assumes the responsibility for filing and paying all the payroll taxes, including W-2 forms; federal, state and city taxes; Social Security; unemployment insurance; everything, and that's a lot of work. So it frees us to do what we do best—careful selection and placement of temporary secretaries.

"If we hired our own staff, it would cost us three times as much to manage our payroll ourselves."

"Bill treats The Laury Girls as people, not as a nine-digit account number."

While Mrs. Ford credits Chemical's comprehensive payroll management system with being a key to her success, she also said, "Chemical launched us with financing back in 1968, and we've been with them ever since. Chemical handles all our banking on a personal basis. We're a people-oriented business, and the individual factor is very important to us. You might say, Bill treats The Laury Girls as people, not as a nine-digit account number."

Our banker is your bank.

Chemical Bank has people who can give you the same kind of help that Bill Barr is giving Laury Ford. Our banker can provide a large number of banking services. Fast, without red tape and wasted time. So you have more time to take care of the business end of your business while our banker takes care of the banking end.

They actually put extra tons of solid granite on a structure whose foundation and walls couldn't stand a gram of extra weight," said Mr. Fowkes. "If it stays up long enough to sink, which, with the granite on the roof is doubtful, it should be two or three years until the settling becomes noticeable. The channel dredging going on will raise the water table even higher than it is now and the foundations are already showing sights of disintegration. But no one will listen.

Then the repressible walkpaper. Roughly a half million dollars in paper was ordered felts, raw silks, handprinted French paper and foils. Iccorrect measuring and ordering meant most of the rooms have only three

"The stuff's crazy for out here," said the head of the three-man team that came from London to hang the papers. "Those felts and silks will be so full of sand and salt they'll be runed within a couple of months."

As it turned out, the papers never stayed on the walls long enough to be ruined. The temperature inside the unairconditioned palace which was kept closed to keep the blowing sand out_ often rose to more than 120 degrees Fahrenheit. The adheave used to hang the pa-per dried in hours in the heat causing much of the wallpaper to contract. The heavier felts in the Majlis (the men's hall) and the raw silk in the residence pulled down from the top-bringing down the well surfaces with

"If we had air conditioning it might have worked," said one of the paper hangers. "But with this heat, there ws no chance, no matter what adhesive we used." The palace was originally designed by Dr. Abdul-Rahman Maklou, an Egyptian architect who heads Abu

Reportedly Dr. Maklou was so disgusted by overcharging by contractors that he began to automatically cut all money requests by 50 percent. Then labor was hired directly, Indians, Pakistanis and Omanis who could understand neither Arabic

Maklou was so incensed by the Englishman's negative reports on the palace that he accused him of being a "Zionist spy" and threw him out of the town planning offices. That ended any hopes of getting the water and elec-tricity lines to run to the palace. After six months Mr. Fowkes left, noting piles of carpeting for the palace still piled high—at the Abu Dhabi asport—and rotting in the

Mr. Fowkes said that before Frayland lost the contract for the palace interior. it presented a new decorating scheme to Sheik Zayed, who was having a checkup in a London hospital. "Too dark, too dark," the

MARGARET KENNEDY Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y. April 20, 1976

Without the success of Jack Morgan's Moscow Mule it is doubtful if John Martin's Smirnoff, or vodka in general, would have achieved the wide success in the United States of which you write in "Vodka is No. 1" (April 18).

The Moscow Mule ginger beer and vodka—is the prod-uct of an Oxford education. Jack Morgan, an American, learned of ginger beer while a student at that university.

On his return to the United States, he and his brother Percy established a restaurant, arranged to import genuine ginger beer made in England—bottled, as in England, in genuine crocks-and mixed it with vodka.

The industry, to be sure, still has some problems. Approvals of new drugs by the Federal Food and Drug Administration has declined. According to the control of the con cording to a comollation by Pharmacy Times, a trade publication, an average of 15 new drugs were marketed in each of the last five years, far below the 39 per year that the industry had been averaging since World War II.

"There is no doubt that the cost and time required to certify a new product have dra-matically increased," said William N. Hubbard, president of Upjohn. The new administrative approaches have added redundancy and complexity without adding Another uncertainty inunives international operations. The drug companies have depended heavily on the raoid growth potential of foreign markets, particularly as the domestic market becomes saturated; they are behind only the petroleum and computer industries in multi-

"Between 1970 and 1974, international sales grew at twice the rate of domestic sales," said Mr. Sweig, "but it is going to be more and more difficult to maintain that growth." The drug compaoies also face pressure on their prices abroad as foreign governments seek to reduce the rising cost of health care by squeezing the American companies — what Mr. Hubbard of Upjohn termed "the serious implications of rising nationalism."

INVESTING

Some slock market analysts say that as the drug companies mature, the sharp rate of growth of the past becomes harder to maintain. Part of the problem is that "Part of the problem is that the companies have diversified, diluting the effect of drug profits," said Thomas W. Luciani a drug analyst at Bache Halsey Stuart loc. "Another part is that the companies are getting larger and larger, meaning that the base is getting larger and larger. It's hard to keep momentum going." momentum going."

For their part, some drug company executives believe that a return to more frequent new product introduc-tions will restore past growth

"Back in the mid-1950's, some people on Wall Street had the same questions," says Richard D. Wood, the chairman of Eli Lilly & Company. "It is true that industry research goes through phases." Recause of the industry's commitment to research, Mr. Wood believes that "over a period of time, there's great business and financial potential in this the stock market analysts, because of the uncertainties, do not believe that drug stock prices will ever return to past high multiples. Mr. Saks predicts that instead of 25 to 30 times earnings, the stocks, which are now selling for 17 times earnings, will stabilize in the low 20's.

"You have to be more selective in which companies to invest in," Mr. Sweig said. "You can't just throw a dart anymore and pick a winner."

Expert judgment in municipal bonds ...

Our clients' municipal bond portfolios are diversified because our inventory is.

Our clients get diversified municipal bond portfolios almost automatically, because our inventory is always so well diversified.

A look at our monthly list will prove that.

We're not saying that diversification is a new idea, but we do it New York City bonds are a perfect case in point.

For ten years prior to its crisis, New York City bonds were far more abundant and easier to sell than other bonds. And for some New York banks and dealers New York City bonds accounted for between 50 and 90% of their sales to individuals for many of those years.

At Stoever Glass & Co., despite the fact that New York City bonds had very high yields, a good rating and were always plentiful and very much in demand, our policy of diversilication limited them to 13% of our total retail sales during this period.

Because we hadn't over sold New York City bonds, we never once failed to give a client a bid for a Cily bond we sold him.

But more important, we had diversified their portfolios so well that very few of our clients even had to ask us for a bid.

Initially, he said, he was shocked when he learned that his new boss was a woman, "I'd oever worked for a woman before—I guess I was expecting all the old cliches. But it's worked out surprisingly well."

'It cleaned up the language around the office," he added, "But that's about

"if Sally had come in here on a crusade she never would have mada it—they'd have eaten her alive," said her boss, the regional manager, William Wessel, "Sally's strength is her logical approach to things and the fact that sha doesn't panic. The most critical consideration in choosing someone for a job like hers is, do they think their way out of a situation or react their way out."

"If there's anything a woman in management needs to do differently from man," savs Mrs. Humery, "it's to a man," says Mrs. Humery, "it's to learn not to react as fast. She's still on trial in a certain sense and everyone expects her to react emotionally. Which is only because most of the situations men have been in with women befora have been emotional-mothers or wives or sweethearts."

'The first time I really chewed somebody out, everybody was shocked and expected me to stay angry and emotionat all day. I might have if it had been a personal thing. But there is e difference between professional and personal reactions for men and women

Mrs. Humery says she doesn't know what discrimination is because she's never encountered it. "But I would probhave to get hit over the head with it before I realized I was being discriminated against," she admits.

"I'm very stubborn—and egotistical," she explained. "I won't go out on a limb for an ideological cause, but they hit me io the hread basket will be a knock-down, drag-out fight. If you let something happen, it will."

She acknowledged that there are a few hazardous side effects involved in being the first female in her position. "You get quite a reaction when you call an engineer in the middle of the night and tell his wife in your female voice that you need her husband." She countered the reaction by inviting the engineers and their families to her home for a barbeque to get acquainted.

"Sally is one of the guys on the job but she doesn't lose hold of her femininity in a social setting," said Mr. Wessel, her hoss. "Manager is a neuter term as far as I'm concerned."

By LOUIS RUKEYSER

When the Tittanic has already hit the iceberg, it's a little late to fire the captain. That's the message the New York Stock Exchange apparently missed last week when it forced the resignation of its chairman, James J. Needham, and signed with reilef—as if that act alone would induce the orchestra to switch from "Nearer My God to Thee" to "Happy Days Are Here Again."

Mr. Needham may not have been the most popular heimsmen-his course could be er-bratic, and his manner as rough as the North Atlantic in December—but he did not invent the problems that made his directors so queru-linus, nor will those problems wanish with his departure. What the exchange truly, needs is a full mental over-hand that will banish forever-its "private club" syndrome, bring the institution into something resembling this decade (or at least the last) and broaden its vision a millimeter or two beyond the parochial concerns of those who labor at Broad and Wall. Until it does, it will con-tinue to resemble a sand castle under the protection of an endless succession of King Canutes.

Consider, just for starters, the shameful postwar history of the exchange's dealings with the vast majority of those who do business there—the so-called little guys. Arter courting them for a gen-eration with glittering advertisements urging them to buy a share in America, the exchange showed itself both incompetent and impolite when they started to come

The incompetence was evident in the failure of the exchange, and the industry it purported to lead, to pre-pare for the increase in trading volume that took place in the late 1960's.

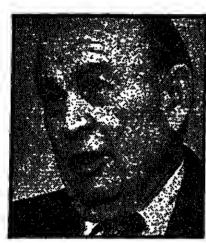

At times, the mighty New York Stock Exchange was forced to shut down during ordinary trading hours, in a humiliating confession that it was mable fully to meet its central market for the world.

Himiliating — but ap-parently not humbling. For the exchange continued to ay out a three-part scenario its relations with small inrstora.

When they weren't there, the exchange courted them. When they arrived; the industry was allowed to sneer at them. And when they departed (by the exchange's own count, 5 million more hvestors left than entered between 1970 and 1975), the exchange yearned for them. The yearning was abetted after May 1, 1975, by the dis-covery that negotiated commissions had diminished the attractiveness of institutional business—and that, as the former exchange president, tobert W. Haack, put it, "the sion was hardly inspiring.

...changing captains won't stop the ship from sinking brokerage business of the future that has the most to offer is the retail business."

But the exchange failed to translate its yearning into meaningful reform. Indeed, the centerpiece of American capitalism all too often has proceeded as if it regarded any move toward competi-tion in its own industry as evidence of a nefarious Communist piot.

The exchange's resistance to the inevitability of competitive commissions, for example, placed it in the ludicrous position of viewing Merrill Lynch and the Securities and Exchange Commis-sion as a pair of dangerous radicals. (It is noteworthy that, in the first 12 months of competitive brokerage charges for small transactions, they have turned out to be a rarety among retail prices - actually coming down a notch.)

The widespread perception of the exchange's directors as a group of Old Guard fo-gies, protecting the narrow interests of what will surely be the last generation of mo-nopolistic floor specialists, is hanced by the composition of the board of directors it-

Its moves toward "public" representation have been grudging and belated. The public is not yet adequately represented on the board because, whatever the board may believe, the typical individual investors does not think that his interests are identical to those of a president of a major corporation.
The feeling of getting the "country cousin" treatment as a small investor has scarcely been diminished by the board's quiet action this year discontinuing the exchange's vaunted Month Investment Plan, which bad allowed systematic stock purchases with as little as $40 a quarter. True, there were only 17,-000 accounts left and these were being handled by the sole odd-lot house, which is going out of business; true, as early signs that the board would jet its Pinocchio wander only so far on his own-More serious was the exchange's seemingly constitutional inability to connect itself with the wider public inter-abortive campaign to alert the nation to the genuine danger of a forthcoming cap-ital shortage. (And whatev-er became of the big adverer became of the big adver-tising effort to expound the benefits of "dollar averag-ing?" Such advice virtually evaporated at the very time the exchange should have been giving it most vigorous-ly, when stock prices were horribly depressed in 1974.) Perhaps the exchange's most fundamental error has been its apparent death wish.

been its apparent death wish, to appear to the public as rigid and unchangeable. The notion that this is a proper business attitude is out-rageously wrong headed.

It is perfectly obvious by now that the nation's securi-ties industry is moving into an era that will take greater advantage of modern elec-

In the short run, this cer-tainly means beightened competition for the traditional market makers on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange. (Competitive spe-cialists have been operating for quite some time at places as diverse es the London and Pacific stock exchanges, and the financial world has not crumbled.)

In the longer run, it means that the average investor is going to have much greater information, much better service and much wider op-

The exchange has the choice of adapting to these changes or continuing to act as if the guaranteed profitability of all its conventional components is more important than the future of the tant than the future of the industry it claims to lead.

As 1976 already has demonstrated, change is not necessarily written in red ink for all. But those who cannot read the handwriting on the clacker board will sink without a trace, and it will be scant consolation to blame it on the captain.

Earn income on your cash re-serves even ever short periods of these. If you're keeping extra money in your checking or savings account—money you don't need now but might need later—put some of it into Dreyfus Liquid Assets until you actually need it. Even if it's just for a few weeks, your money will be working for you.

2 Write checks on your Dreyfus Liquid Assets account to pay large bills. You can write a check for any amount over $500. You'll earn income right up to the day the check clears. We give you a free supply of chacks. Pay your doctor, your broker, taxes, tuition— any large bill. Or take out cash for Save yourself the trouble of making your own money market investments. If you've been boying notes, bills or certificates of deposit for yourself or your organization, you'll find it's a lot easier to buy Dreyfus Liquid Assets. There's no paperwork, no worrying about maturity dates, roll-overs, safe keeping or delivery-and there's no sales charge.

4 Take care of fiduciary duties.
If you're in temporary charge of someone else's maney—as an executor or trustee—a Dreyfus Liquid Assets account may be an appropriate way to handle those funds. The money will be available instantly when it's needed, and until then it will be productively invested and professionally managed.

5 Give yourself a regular monthly income. You can keep your dividends reinvested in additional shares—or have them paid to you monthly or quarterly. And if you invest $5,000 or more, you can arrange to receive fixed payments of $50 or more every month or quarter. Of course, such a plan may result in your account being depleted if your withdrawals exceed your dividends.

6 Take advantage of current in-terest rates. Droyfus Liquid Assets invests your money exclusively in large money market instruments. You benefit from higher interest rates than you may be able to find elsewhere, especially if you want total liquidity. And you can invest as little as $2,500.

Maintain liquidity and stabil-ity. As a shareholder of Dreyfus Liquid Assets, you own an interest in a very large and relatively stable pool of money market instruments. The money you invest is not tied up in any way. You can cash in your shares at net asset value at any time, or add to your investmen whenever you wish (minimum $500). And because your money goes into stable short-term obligations, there is very little fluctuation in the value of your shares.

Diversify your portfolio. Dray-fus Liquid Assets invests only in U.S. Government securities, certificates of deposit of the largest banks, blue-drip commercial paper, and bankers' accep-tances. Do you have this kind of quality and safety in your particlio now?

His brash manner and outspoken ways offended some members of the community, including a few who had hired him on the premise that Mr. Needham's experience at the S.E.C. would help the exchange in its dealings with Washington regulators. Specialists on the floor, many of them losing large sums of their own money during the bear market, groused about the size of Mr. Needham's salary and his trips abroad. More important in light of his eventual ouster, however, were the juggernaut issues with which he as chairman, coming into office with the inherent disadvantages of a newly-constituted board and a new constitution, had to the trading floor essentially ruled the Board, was to sell the public on the concept of buying stocks. The brokerage business was then a cottage industry (mostly serving well-beeled clients and boardroom traders) with a stodgy image.

Mr. Funston popularized the theme, "Own Your Share of American Business," and the stock market boom was on its way. Average volume on the Big Board rose from less than 2 million shares daily in 1950 to nearly 13 million shares a day in 1968. By then, however, the exchange was not able to man-

Meanwhile, large institu-tions such as banks and mutual funds were assuming dominance as market participants, trading huge blocks of stock and applying pressure for lower brokerage rates. They were, moreover, taking part of their business to regional exchanges and to the growing "third market," where Big Board-listed stocks were traded in compe-

So it was that Mr. Haack (whose suggestion was to prove prophetic; fully negotiated commission rates went into effect just one year ago) and Mr. Needham, for different reasons, were effectively forced to leave the helm of the exchange, although Mr. Heack did finish out his fiveyear term.

In retrospect, Mr. Needbam made errors in his strategy to preserve the status quo at the exchange. He assailed the third market as the 'private in competition. In February of last year, Mr. Needham told a reporter. You can tell the S.E.C. that Needham said if we don't get what we want he'll see them on the steps of the court-house in Foley Square." It turned out to be an idle threat. The exchange did not sue and competitive rates took effect last May 1. The men on the trading floor were furious at Mr. Needham. But it was the board of directors who had made the decision not to litigate.

The last two men who headed the exchange faced the same essential problem: the divided interests of their constituency. Retail firms disagree among themselves and with the floor when it comes to policy. The other segments of the constituency the public, the Washington regulators and, in a sense, the board itself—in turn represent goals that often differ with those of the exchange membership.

Amana Sues Consumers Union

Microwave ovens are at the heart of a controversy that's erupted between Amana—a major producer of the ovens—and Consumers Union, the nation's best-known product tester and publisher of Consumer Reports magazine.

Trouble flared when Amana used io its advertising some favorable notices that Consumer Reports had published in 1968. The organization forbids advertisers from using its reports and also was upset with Amana for ignoring e 1973 Consumer Reports article questioning the safety of microwave ovens.

When Consumers Union asked Amana to stop using the 1968 material Amana responded by filing a $6 million damage suit against Consumers Union.

The Amana suit also seeks damages for loss of sales when a later Consumer Reports survey of refrigeratorfreezers ignored Amana's top model, and asks the court to allow information from the magazine to be used in Early in 1974 Con-sumers. Union, which publishes Consumer Reports. recommended against buying the ovens. Their testers said they found measureable radiation leaks in many brands.

But the Federal Food and Drug - Administration's Bureau of Radiological Health never concurred in this view and the controversy subsided. Consumers Union will release another report on microwave ovens about the end of May. The organization won't discuss its recommendations in advance but a softer stance is expected.

The Federal performance standards adopted in 1971 specify that a new oven must not emit more than I milli-watt of radiation per square centimeter measured at five centimeters from the outside surface of the oven. Nor may it produce more than five timeter for the life of the product. The Bureau of Radi-ological Health conducts field inspections and random oven that is certified to meet our standards is safe for use," said J. Arthur Lazell, assiatant director of the bureau. "An oven that is well cared for and properly maintaiocd is probably not going to give any trouble."

Mr. Lazell says his agency has no documented example of anyone being injured by a properly functioning oven. The bureau requires an interlock so that when the door is opened, the oven shuts off. If this device were to malfunction, it would be possible to get heavy bursts of microwave energy when the door is opened.

Ovens made after Sept. 29, 1975, also must carry this warning. Do not attempt operate this oven with (a) an object caught in the door; (b) door that does not close properly; (c) damaged door, hinge, latch or sealing

The warning can be akipped if the maker can prove to the Government that there is absolutely no danger. Amana, for example, woo such an exemption for two of its higher priced models.

Five manufacturers have at various times been declared to be in non-com-pliance with Federal stan-dards because certain oven models were emitting more radiation than allowed. Four companies made the oecessary corrections or are in the process of doing so.

The only case unresolved lovolves about 36,000 Versatronic and Hotpoint Cookeentrouc and Hotpoam Cookeen-ter combination ranges (not counter top models) maou-factured after November, 1973, by General Electric. Of this number, Mr. Lazell says, only 28,000 left the plant, G.E., contending these plant, G.E., contending these are safe, has appealed the initial finding by the bureau but early in 1975 G.E. agreed to correct conditions in 16, 000 other combination ovens

"If I were wearing any one of these," he says, "I wouldn't get right on top of an operating oven but otherwise I wouldn't worry too much about it."

Countertop models start at ebout $150 and go up to $600 with the best sellers in the $400 to $500 class. Combination ranges that have both electric and microwave capabilities sell from $699 to $959.

William W. George, pres-ideot of Litton Microwave, says that "while we are selling combination ranges as replacements for conventional ones, we aren't promoting the countertop models as substitutes. There are a few things they can't do as well, like cooking a souffle, for example. Nor do we think they ever will."

He believes the liberating influence of these appliances for women is enormous. But within the hard core of the women's liberation move-ment, the joy is subdued.

"As long as it is going to be viewed as a labor saving device for women, forget it. We are still in the kitchen," protests Lettle Collin Pogrebin, an editor of MS magazioe.

Lockheed at Large

By JOHN M. LEE

OR two decades the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation OR two decades the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has been at the center of assorted corporate dramas. There were the failures with the Electra turboprop in the 1950's, the Central Intelligence Agency links with the U-2 spy plane, the huge cost overruns on the C-5A military transport, the crash-propa F-104's in West Germany, the cliffhanger on marketing the wide-bodied L-1011 jetliner with Rolls-Royce engines. the extraordinary Government-guaranteed losn in 1971 to evert bankruptcy and the continuing battle to achievo financial viability, given a grotesque burden of debt.

Fast there lockheed is something special—a key link in the military-industrial complex, with close ties to the Pentagon and C.I.A. a provider of advanced technology; arms-solies to the Western alliance, and instrument of national policy in the confrontation with Communism. Glearly Lockheed's survival and even its prosperity have been deemed vital to the national interest.

Now, Lockheed finds itself at the center of the most far-reaching controversy of its crisis-prone history—namely, the payment of some $24 million in bribes and kickbacks over a number of years to promote the sale of both military and commercial sircraft abroad. In its zeal for selling, Lockheed overstepped the hounds of what many consider proper corporate conduct.

Of course Lockheed is but one of some 100 major.

American corporations that have admitted, under pressure from the Securities and Exchange Commission, improper payments. As comeons noted, in a colorful turn of phrase, "the guys in white hats have been caught red-handed." It is one of the most unsavory episodes in American business history.

But here again, Lockheed is something special. Al-though the machinations of the Gulf Gil Corporation, the Northrop Corporation and United Brands Inc. are startling enough, Lockheed has admitted payments to pro-Western Government figures in Italy and Japan, as well as to Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands. It has thereby provided devastating political ammunition to opposition elements in those countries. The efforts of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation pale beside what Lockheed may unwittingly accomplish. The disclosure of improper dealings with Lockheed helped undermine confidence in the Christian Democratic Government in Italy, which re-signed on Friday. If the new elections bring Communists into the Government, will Lockheed share the blame? Will the stigma of Lockheed associations also undermine the Government of Japan and the royal family of the Netherlands as well?

Several observations might be made concerning the arms business. Lockheed's own attitudes, the interests of the nations abroad and the interests of the United

Arms and bribery have long been linked. The notoriety. of Sir Basil Zaharoff and his wheeling and dealing for Vickers of Britain before World War I encouraged the phrase, "merchants of death." Cynics have always assumed a certain amount of bribery in arms sales, and in this view, the current disclosures simply confirm the obvious. It's nothing new, "Everybody" does it.

The trouble with this reasoning is that in an escalating competition, the richest and most reckless company is the winner. Moreover countries may be induced by bibery to buy what they don't need and can't efford, and on a more practical level, the bribery itself, when exposed can lead to commercial loss and political repor-

The arguments for going ahead are thet, "If we don't sell them arms, someone else will," and that the spread of American arms and aircraft abroad is an instrument

MARKETS IN REVIEW

Dow Slips by 3.86 In Quiet Trading

Prices moved fitfully in the equities and credit mar-kets last week: up somewhat early in the period but closand on Friday below where they stood last Monday.

In the equities markets the experience was viewed n some quarters as a continuation of the "consolidation" phase that has followed the strong rump that started in December and extended through January and February.

Beyond such internal nuances, however, participants n both markets were on the lookout all week for the atest Federal Reserve report on the nation's money apply. Several successive weekly multi-billion-dollar ncreases in the money supply gave rise to speculation hat another large increase might well lead to a decision by the Fed to shiften monetary policy.

The $400 million increase in the money supply that vas reported late Thursday afternoon appeared to leave nonetary policy—and interest rate direction—somewhat spen to question still. Stock and bond prices were lower in Friday in continued quiet trading.

For the week as a whole, the Dow Jones average of it industrials was down 3.86 points at 996.85. New York stock Exchange volume, in turn, shrank to 84.80 million hares, compared with 103.78 million shares traded in he previous week. Beyond the money supply and interest rate questions, nvestors were given mostly favorable first quarter earn-ness reports. Oil issues, among others, have been active and higher in response to such reports. Several analysts are now expecting that the automobile issues also will benefit from the higher profits they have been reporting. us well as projections for improved sales.

of national prestige and influence, making the buyer beholden to the technological largesse of the United States. The arms salesman is thus unleashed and encouraged by the Pentagon Besides, it's good for the balance of payments and for unemployment in California.

Lockheed thus undertook such activity, along with others, on a world wide basis. But what Lockheed apparently failed to realize was that while the world might wink indulgently at payoffs to the Hottentots—after ell, bribery was thought to be a way of life in Asie, Latin America end the Middle East—it was quite another matter to make payoffs in Western societies where standards of ethical behavior are avowed to be stricter. An outcry at public disclosure was inevitable.

Another matter that apparently confuses the arms seller, and in this case Lockheed, is the identity of the enemy. In Japan, the enemy seemed to be the Grumman Aircraft Corporation even more than the Russians. Testimony has shown that Lockheed bribery in Japan took an order away from Grumman. Io effect, Burbank, Calif., (Lockheed) cheated at the expense of Bethpage, L.L.

Foreign countries have expressed astonishment not so much at the hribery as at the American obsession for exposing if, and European sophisticates lament the trouble Americans have caused by their post-Watergate zeal for harsh disclosure. Anthony Sampson, the British author, wrote recently, "In the [view of] European societies, the coloration of mild traditional corruption is ... a low price to pay for the continuation of the Italian Christian Democrats, the Dutch monarchy or the Atlantic alliance fiself."

indeed, business-Government efforts in arms sales or other exports are more coordinated abroad. It is almost inconceivable that the French or Japanese Governments would accuse their own businessmen of bribery. Jepanese officials have been notably slow in pursuing the Lockheed bribery investigation in that country lest confidence in the long-standing Liberal Democratic Government be undermined.

In the United States, life is more pluralistic and interests more diverse.

The State Department has agreed to turn over the names of foreigners involved in the payoffe to their respective Governments only if the names are kept secret until ectual charges are levied. Critics say this means the Governments will keep things bottled up to avoid political embarrassment. The view of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger seems to be that the goriest details should be kept secret to hold undemocratic ele-ments at bay. President Ford belatedly recognized the spreading scandal by appointing a panel of Cabinet members to come up with recommendations. But little is expected until after the November election, and by then, whatever public anxiety exists may have subsided. The thrust for disclosure thus seems to rest with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Senators like Frank Church and William Proxmire and some of the news media.

Some people, like the S.E.C. chairman, Roderick M. Hills, assert that much progress has already been made in cleaning up American business methods. Many corporations have set up special audit committees, strengthened the role of their outside (non-executive) directors and established new codes of conduct or reaffirmed old ones. Auditors are more vigilant, and couple of the most conspicuously involved executives-Daniel J. Haughton at Lockheed and Bob R. Dorsey at Gulf-have been ousted.

To the view of many, the messive disclosures of improper corporate conduct by Lockheed and others have a uniquely American flavor. There stands the moralistic Frank Church lecturing the cynical Europeans. Shades of Woodrow Wilson! But the genie is out of the bottle. no one can put it back and what it will do next is enyone'e guess. .

What happened in the world, the nation, the New York area? You get a wrap-up of the week's news in The Week In Review section of the Sunday New York Times. D.K. Ludwig: The Man and the Money

When Howard Hughes died, tycoon-watchers immediately passed his title—the world's most eccentric and reclusive billionaire—to D. K. Ludwig.

By MARYLIN BENDER

The comparison, however, is only superfi-cial. Mr. Ludwig is not eccentric, unless being obsessed with one's husiness at the hrink of one's 79th hirthday is a sign of abnormal behavior. Nor is he a recluse, as countless friends and associates who see and talk to him in New York, Los Angeles, Palm Beach, Rio da Janeiro and elsewhere will attest

Although many knowledgeable members of the business community confess they have never heard of him and even some of those who have actually worked for him don't perceive the full scope of his global reach, he is undisputably very rich.

Daniel Keith Ludwig is America's biggest—and probably the world's third biggest—shipping lord. His principal corporate vehicle is National Bulk Carriers Inc., one of the world's largest private multinational corporations. And he owns it all himself.

The company publishes no financial statements, but a few years ago it circuleted selectively, a 36-page brochure setting out its activities. They were said to embrace operations in 23 countries employing more than 20,000 peopla and "several billion dollars in assets."

D. K. Ludwig was also Howard Hughes'

During the illness that led to his death last month, Mr. Hughes was holed up in the penthouse of the Acapulco Princess, the largest resort hotel in Mexico which was huilt in 1971 at a cost of $64 million, all of it neid with Judwig cash and not a second of the largest part of the large paid with Ludwig cash and not a penny of debt.

In 1974, Mr. Hughes had bought one of his earlier hideaways, the Xanadu Princess in the Bahamas, for an estimated $15 million from Mr. Ludwig's luxury hotel company, Princess Properties.

Whether the negotiations between Mr.

This article is based on reporting by Peter Kilborn in London, Alan Riding in Mexico City, Ian Stewart in Sydney and Werner Bam-herger in New York, as well as Marylin Bender.

Hughes and Mr. Ludwig ever extended beyond discussions of possible merger of their respec-tive hotel chains remains a subject of intense speculative interest. So is the fact that Mr. Ludwig, like Mr. Hughes, has set up a foundation with the aim of dishursing tha mejor part of his fortune after his death for medical research. Mr.' Ludwig's primary interest is said to be a cure for cancer.

Beyond these similarities, however, the Hughes analogy wiits.

"Ludwig is interested neither in publicity nor in mystery," said an aide (demanding anonymity, of course). He was explaining why, despite an aversion to interviews and stories about himself in the press, D. K. Ludwig cannot fairly be termed a recluse.

His lean, tall figure, stooped from age as well as a painful back injury sustained 50 years ago during the rescua of two seaman from an explosion on one of his ships, may be seen walking from his New York apartment on Fifth Avenue to his office in the Burlington House skyscraper on the Avenue of the Americas, at 54th Street. (He owns Burlington House and another Manhattan office building in joint venture with the Fisher

Ha lunches, often alone, in public restaurants like "21" or at the Warwick Hotel, Ha makes and takes his own telephone calls, or is put through quickly by a pleasant-mannered secretary. When he travels to his colonies, he flies on commercial airlines, often in economy class. He simply is not recognized by the public or the average man on Wall Street.

Crusty, short-tempered and salty in his language with men during his husiness dealings, nevertheless has a steely gallantry. Occasionally, as at the opening celebration at the Acapulco Princess, he summons his large circle of acquaintances.

Among those who flew to Acapulco were Kay Gable, wife of his late, good friend Clark Gable; the presidents of Nicaragua, the Gulf Oil Corporation, the Standard Oil companies of New Jersey and Indiana, Litton Industries, the Bank of America and Citibank, and tha then Governor of California, Ronald Reagan.

An economic conservative, Mr. Ludwig displays no hard-and-fast pattern in making polltical contributions. He gave $2,500 to the 1972 New York primary campaign of Senator Hen-ry Jackson, Democrat of Washington.

Richard M. Nixon was a guest of Mr. Ludwig and his wife Ginger before be became President. Mr. Ludwig retained the Nixon law firm (now Mudge, Rose Guthrie & Alexander) for a while and after Mr. Nixon resigned from the Presidency, he hired Frederic V. Malek, a White House executive recruiter and member of H. R. Haldeman's management team.

But Mr. Malek made the mistake of announcing at a press conference that he would be belping Mr. Ludwig "in directing his worldwida organizations." His salary was reported to be in the six figures. Mr. Ludwig thereupon rescinded the offer but did permit Mr. Malek to earn out his first year's salary with a consulting assignment.

Michigan-born, Texas-reared, and the only child of a real estate agent, Mr. Ludwig amassed his world-wide domain without the hoost from an industrial legacy such as Mr. Hughes had.

Ha went into the chartering husiness et 19 with $5,000 raised mostly on his father:s credit. He bought an old steamer and converted it into a barge for hauling molasses on the Great Lakes. For the next 20 years, ha moved into higger tanker deals-and ever deeper debt.

In the late 1930's he developed a financing technique that would also be used after World War II hy his penniless Greek rivals, Aristotle Onassis and Stayros Niarchos, to create their mighty tanker fleets. Mr. Ludwig would line up a long-term charter from a major oil company, turn it over to a hank or insurance company as collateral for a loan and thus cover the entire cost of building a tanker without Mr. Ludwig's having to put up a cent.

During World War II, his shipyard near · Norfolk, Va., developed a process for welding he saw the advantage of using cheap labor in a foreign land where a hospitable government would grant other cost benefits as well.

This concept, which he is currently applying to a visionary forestry project in Brazil, was first brought to bear in Japan. In 1951, he signed a 10-year lease with a renewal option for the naval shipyard at Kure. As he built larger and larger vessels at that shipyard, starting with 100,000 tonners in the 1950's. his claim to the paternity of the supertanker was established.

In e race with his Greek rivals, he pulled ahead in 1968 when a fleet of six 335,000-ton crude carriers to transport oil from the Persian Gulf to Bantry Bay in Ireland.

Today with a deadweight tonnage of 5.6 million, the Ludwig fleet of 50-odd tankers and hulk carriers, operating under the Universe Tankships subsidiary, flying the Liberian flag of convenience and registered in Panama, ranks only behind those of the Chinese shipowners, Y. K. Pao and C. Y. Tung, be lieved to be No. I and No. 2 in the world.

His shipping base—constructed entirely with credit—has served both as collateral and as a gusher of cash for his other mammoth enterprises. A true venture capitalist, he commits vast sums of his own for long-term development-and eventual sale at e gain hopefully, worth waiting for. The latest object of his entrepreneurial passion is the 3.5 million acre tree plantation in the Amazon jungle. region of Brazil.

Among some of his other interests are: GOil refinerles: In 1971, he sold a 75,000 barrel a day refinery in Panama and in 1973 announced plans to build a $300 mil-

Meanwhile, apparently by e stroke of luck, Mr. Ludwig discovered oo his property one of the world's largest deposit of kaolin. The mineral, commercially produced today only in the state of Georgia and in Cornwall, England, is used mainly for hleaching printing paper.

Mr. Ludwig also happens to own land about 150 miles west of Jari which is believed to contain Brazil's richest deposits of hauxite, the raw material for aluminum production. He will have to decide within a matter of months whether or not to develop it, with an American mining company.

He has apparently lost some interest in the venture because the Brazilian government-which is planning to huild its own hydroelectric project and aluminum smel-ter southeast of Jari—has not approved his plans for a 1.7 million kilowatt hydroelectric dam on the Jari River.

According to Brazilian officials, Mr. Ludwig has also abandoned plans to build a $180 million tanker repair facility in Recife, on the northeastern coast. The idea, con-ceived in 1972, was to install four huge dry docks capable of servicing tankers ranging in size up to I million tons oo their way from the Persian Gulf to the United States or Europe. The receot glut in the tanker market was ap-pareotly the key factor that dissuaded Mr. Ludwig. The mao who claims credit for heving lured Mr. Ludwig into the jungle is Roberto de Oliveira Campos, now the Brazilian Ambassador to Britain. Back in 1964, Mr. Campos, as Minister of Planning, travelled to New York to try to interest Mr. Ludwig, and other large American inves-tors, in the development of the Amazoo regioo.

And, finally, Mr. Ludwig has endeared himself to tha authorities by not borrowing e penny for his project from local financial sources.

"All those millions of dollars are money he has brought in from ahroad," said a banker in Rio de Janeiro. "I don't think any other foreign company here can make that statement."

In return, Mr. Ludwig has epparently asked only that the Government not tax or charge duties on imports needed to develop Jari—an advantage that other Amazon investments can also zon investments can also count on—and that ha be given absolute privacy. #### Synthetic Oil vs. the Real Thing

Mobil Oil Company's new synthetic motor oil, Mobil I, has been on the market one month and sales are "promising," spokesmen say, but it's still "hard to tell" how successful it will be, tha company admits.

Mobil claims its oil will improve mileage "as much as 10 miles per tankful" aod reduce engine oil consump-tion" up to 25 percent." But the new oil also costs $3.95 e quert, against $1, or lass for ordioary engine oil. In . oils, a Popular Science editor writes "I'm not convinced synthetics ere cost-effectiva in all cases—that is, that I'll coma out spending-less over-all. But there's no doubt in my mind that the best synthetics can do things that tha best mineral oils cao't." He says he'll use them.

This oil type has been sold lo Alaska and Canada because it's better in the worst cold, but Mobil's campaign is the first big push nationwide the company said.

Most engine oil is refined from the oil that comes from tha ground. The synthetics also come from hydrocarbons -or the petrochemical family-and from asters, or acids from animal and vegetable fats. But they are tailor mada, much synthetic fabrics may be tailor made.

So far the other big oil companies aren't following Mobil, but if the sythetic catches on others are ex-pected to follow quickly.

A complaint about "forced" overtime among engineers. Finding: the company policy was fair and correct, but some managers were operating by their own interpretations, which were not always correct. A frank latter from the vice president helped, but did not entirely eliminate these abuses.

The denial of medical insurance payments to an employee for reasons unclear to him. Finding: the claim was payable and the man got his money.

The mere existence of the embudsman encourages manegers to be sure they canjustify their actions. This preventive aspect similar programs.

is dua largely to the high visibility the position is given, as well as to its high level organizationally-reporting directly to the top man. It would seem that trying to establish the role at a lower level or with less exposure could only result in failure Interestingly, although I expected to experience rebound cases, where a person would come to me for help with e problem and later return, claiming he had been subjected to retribution for using the ombudsman's office, oo such cases ever materialized. I attribute this bappy surprise to the visibility of the office and the fact that many managers viewed the ombudsman as an eld to reducing their work load, rather than as an adversary, So far, I baya discussed what an ombude man can do. But there are plenty of things that the office can not do. Among them. • ¶ Please people whose idea of justice is having their own way, even when it is objectively wrong:

¶Change managerial styles, even when they could objectively be considered wrong. ¶Replece the vital need for an employee and his manager to be honest and open with each other.

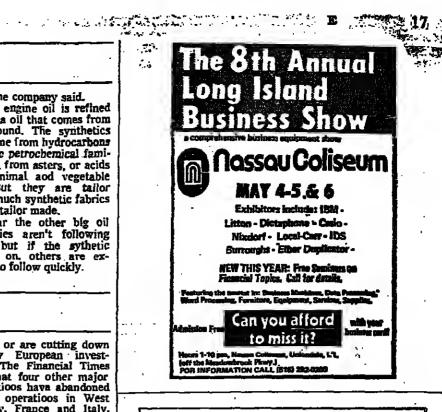

Besides considering what an ombudsman can and can not do, it is important to evaluate whet an ombudsman should be. I have some strong feelings in this area,

In my own case, I came to the role from outside the company. Hence, there were no skeletons in my closet, and I was starting with a clean slate. Selecting an ombudsman from the ranks of current employees would call for utmost care. The person should have an unassailable reputation for honesty and evenhandedness, or he will never gener ate tha trust needed to make the role work

The tenure of office for an ombudsman also should be considered. I favor two extremes: either a brief appointment of perhaps two years or a "lifetime" contract not unlike that of a suprema court justice. In large companies, it would seem bes to insure that the ombudsman could move from that position to an entirely different component or division. Otherwise, the cooffict might emerge of trying to engineer your next job while trying to serve aggrieved employees in complete fairness. Certainly, this conflict could affect the ombudsman's performance and whose toes he chooses to

At General Electric I held the ombudsman's position for two and a balf years, and walcomed the opportunity to move to a different kind of job in the International and Canadian Group, where I could utilize some of the experience that I obtained before joining the company. The Aircraft Engine Group now has two ombudsmen, and at least two other companies have started

It's All Breaking Carter's Way

Jimmy Carter, the former Governor of Georgia, won a major victory in the Pennsylvania primary last week, and now seems near the top of an extraordinary political ascent. What began only months ago as simply his ambition is likely to end a few months from now in the Democratic nomination for the Presideocy.

Senator Henry M. Jackson, the "frontrupper" until the race actualbegan, has now suspended, his campaign, which has been anemic in both votes and finances. Senator Hubert H. Humpbrey, who has heen seeking his party's nomination for almost two decades, announced he would not actively try to stop Mr. Carter by getting into primary races or pursuing uncommitted delegates. Only Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona remains of what was once a small army of aspirants, and there is no sign he can do the job Senator Humphrey declined. On the contrary; labor forces in New Jersey, where Mr. Humphrey might have contested Mr. Carter, have already turoed to the southerner.

Most political analysts now believe that the former Governor of Georgia can accumulate without great difficuity the 1,505 delegates needed for the nominating. He now has over 300; roughly 950 is generally calculated to put a contender within easy frading distance of 1,505 either before the convention or at it.

Texas voted yesterday—complete results may not be known until tomorrow-and Mr. Carter's prospects and strategy there are instructive. Though the state elects 130 delegates. Mr. Carter has not been noticeahly present, presumably so as not to antagonize Senator Lloyd M. Bentsen, Texas's favorite son. Mr. Carter nevertheless may do as well as Mr. Bentsen, because some voters are expected to prefer to vote for a winner rather than for a Texan. The one state Mr. Carter is not contesting is West Virginia, whose favorite son is Robert C. Byrd, Senate majority party unity are now as good as they have been at a comparable stage since 1964, Mr. Carter still has some differences to reconcile. His campaign rhetoric-designed to show his separation from traditional Washington politics and policies-encouraged both labor and the national Democratic hlerarchy to regard him as an outsider, Bringing all factions together in his camp is expected to require some delicacy. And since he will not now meet Senator Humphrey in New Jersey, he must attract any lingering Humphrey supporters by persuasion rather than demonstration.

The Results, Mr. Carter's achievement in Pennsylvania was all the more remarkable because his opposition was not limited to the official contenders, Mr. Jackson and Mr. Udall. In endorsing Mr. Jackson's candidacy, the coalition of labor and local party organizations had in effect endorsed the undeclared candidacy of Mr. Humphrey.

That fact appears to have benefited Mr. Carter, and perhaps Mr. Udall as well, and that is presumably what dispirited Mr. Humphrey, and later Mr. Jackson. The latter effectively resigned from contention after Mr. Humphrey's statement that he was not an active candidate failed to rally the financial support Mr. Jackson needed to continue. In the Pennsylvania popular vote, Mr. Carter received 37 percent; Mr. Jackson, 25 percent and Mr. Udall, 19 percent. The results of the delegate selection were even more telling: Mr. Jackson placed third, with 19 of the state's 178 delegates. Mr. Udall took 22, and Mr. Carter 64.

Mr. Carter's well-publicized remarks on "etholc purity" in neighborhoods appeared not to have damaged his campaign at all. He ran better among black voters than either Mr. Udall or Mr. Jackson.

The Republicons. Both President Ford and Ronald Reagan, former Governor of California and challenger from the purist right for the Repub-lican nomination, have been banking a great deal on Texas, their first meeting since Mr. Reagan took 52 percent of the popular vote in North Carolina's primary March 28.

The Last Word On Intelligence

In a report marking the culmination of 15 months of Congressional investee on Intelligeoce has provided a compendium of the known ahuses by United States Intelligence agencies at home and overseas and a set of recommendations for preventing their recurrence.

The prospects for implementing the report's recommendations are uncertain. Although there apparently was broad support in Coogress for reform of intelligence operations when the abuses were first revealed, the numerous disclosures, both authorized and unauthorized, that issued from the legislative investigations have evidently persuaded some Coogressmen that the need for protectiog intelligence secrets is oow greater than the need for altering the agencies. The Senate panel's sister committee in the House has already had its similar reform recommendations overshadowed by a dispute about the publication of portions of its report despite a House vote to keep it se-

Prospects for reform have also been diminished by the failure of three Republicans on the committee, Vice Chairman John Tower of Texas, Barry Goldwater of Arizona and Howard Baker of Tennessee, to give the report their unqualified endorsement. The three said they were concerned that some of the remedial measures proposed might "impose undue restrictions" upon the intelligence

In the foreign intelligence field, the report's main conclusion was that Presidents had made "excessive and, at times, self-defeating use of covert ection." As the primary corrective, the committee recommended strengthened legislative oversight of intelligence operations hy joint or separate Congressional committees, including budgetary control and the right to be informed in advance about clandestine activities.

In the domestic intelligence field, the report concluded that Governmeot agencies had violated the civil liberties of Americans on a vast scale for decades by using illegal or questionable surveillance techniques against thousands of persons without justification. Most of these activities, the committee found, had been either explicitly approved or implicitly con. doned hy senior officials of six Admi-

To prevent a recurrence of these ahuses, the report urged that the guidelines for domestic security investigations recently promulgated hy Attorney General Edward H. Levi be amplified and embodied in legislation; the guidelines, prohibit the use of informants, mail covers, and electronic surveillance unless the investigative targets seem likely to employ violence or break the law. The report also called for all noncriminal intelligence investigations to be centralized, under close Congressional scrutiny, in the Federal Bureau of Investigation, eliminating the domestic role of the Central intelligence Agency and its military counterparts.

Committee:

A Return

To Basics

For more than a year this country's intelligence agencles have been the focus of sensational disclosures, strong criticism, and powerful defense. Last week the Senate Select Committee on Intelligeoce, ending its investigation, tried to put the issues into a more studled and philosophical perspective. It was the perspective of the American

The Framers of the Constitution feared official power. To restrain it they relied ultimately on public opinion, expressed freely in a republican James Madison called "auxiliary precautioos" against the abuse of government power: the system of checks and balances. And, as the Constitutioo has worked in practice, another fundamental safeguard has been the pervasive influence of law, enforced by the courts against the highest officials, even against Presidents.

The Secate committee, in its final report, found that none of those safeguards had functioned effectively in the intelligence field. Secrecy prevented public opinion from having any effect, at least until the sheer mass of abuses finally spilled into view. Law was treated with disregard or even contempt, and the courts were reluctant to Intervene. Congress abdicated its role of scrutiny under the balance of nowers, deferring to an increasingly powerful and unrestrained executive branch.

The Factual Record

The report appeared in two volumes, covering foreign and domestic intelligence activities. Together they provide an extraordinary factual record, the domestic volume especially rich in new detail of what has been done in the name of national security. The history and the problems in the two areas are very different, but the committee's many findings and recommendations sound one common theme, that the intelligence activities of a 20th century superpower require the old constraints of the Constitution: the system of mulually wetchful institutions, of

As an example of the prevailing attitudes toward law, the committee cited the testimony of George C. Moore, former head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's racial intelligence section, about Cointelpro. For 15 years, under that program, the bureau harassed innocent citizens it disliked. Its "unsavory and vicious tactics," the committee said, included such violations of law as "mail fraud, incitement to violence, sending obscene material through the mail and extortion." The committee asked Mr. Moore whether anyona had ever discussed the constitutional or legal authority for Cointelpro. He answered: 'No, we never gave it a

On the foreign side, a committee headed by General James H. Doolittle advised President Eisenhower in 1954 that in conducting covert operations the United States should forget "bitherto acceptable norms of human conduct" and long-standing "concepts of American fairplay." The assumption was that national security imposed necessities higher than law.

One of the fundamentals of the Constitution is that officials must alweys be able to point to some specific authority in law for what they do. In the intelligence field this rule has simply been ignored. For example, the Senate report said, no statute ever provided clear authority for any covert operations abroad, Successive administrations after 1947 simply assumed such a right, creating "authority" for the operations in secret executive orders. The pattern went beyond zbsence of law to conscious breaking of lew. Officials "advocated and defended their right to break the law," the committee said. It cited the case of a bureau official who defended the deliberate violation of law in opening citizens' mail by saying: "The greater good, the national security . . . This is what I believed in."

executive branch had "inherent power" to 60 what it thought necessary for national security regardless of law. Former President Nixon recently spoke of a President exercising such power as the "sovereign." "There is no sovereign who stands above the law," the committee said. "Each of us, from Presidents to the most disadvantaged citizen, must obey the law." Both volumes emphasize the need to encourage respect for law in the intelligence field. For example, they say that the Attorney General should by statute be made an adviser to the National Security Council, responsible for insuring that planned covert actions abroad "are consistent with the Constitution and

The report called on Congress to provide basic legal guidelines for both foreign and domestic intelligence: Statutory charters saying who is authorized to do what. These statutes would be the exclusive authority, precluding conflicting executive orders. In dozens of recommendations the report proposed laws aimed at particular abuses found by the committee and at what it called a general gross over-use of covert methods. The report said that foreign covert actions have multiplied beyond real need, developing "e bureaucratic momentum." There have been 900 major operations since 1960, "increasiogly costly to America's interest and reputation." The committee proposed that covert actions be reserved for "grave threats to American security" and be "coosistent with publicly defined U.S. foreign policy goals." It said that all political assassinations and efforts to subvert democratic governments should be outlawed.

The Covert Record

Similarly, on domestic intelligence, the report found that covert acts had gotten out of hand: 500,000 F.B.I. "subversive" investigations between 1960 and 1974 for instance, with not one prosecution resulting; domestic snooping by the Central Intelligence Agency and the Army; and the use of Cointelpro for essentially political purposes against "social movements" disliked by F.B.I. officials. Again the committee sought a remedy for these abuses io law. It said that all domestic security responsibility should be centered in the bureau and, crucially, that the bureau's function should be limited to activity in aid of law enforcement, it recommended laws against the political use of intelligence and agaiost harassment of citizens. It proposed tight legal restraiots on electronic surveillance and mail openings, with court orders required. It urged new criminal lews against violations of these intelligence rules, and civil damage remedies for injured citizens.

Can law work in an area where so much is shrouded in secrecy? "Abuse thrives oo secrecy," the report said. It noted that many illegal or abusive programs had in fact heen ended only when they were publicly exposed or threatened with exposure. But it offered no new answer to the dilemma of secrecy and security-no new public right to know, exposing intelligence activities to the sunlight thet Justice Brandeis sald was "the best disinfectant."

Instead, the committee relied on that other safeguard of the American constitutional system: the various branches of Government watching each other. To that it added an effort to produce some bureaucratic momentum within the executive branch in favor of legal controls. In short, the committee sought to apply to intelligence the traditional American theory of accountabili-

Foreign covert actions, the report said, bave tended to go ahead without serious formal scrutiny; three-quarters of them "are never reviewed or approved by a bigb-level body outside the C.I.A." The committee urged a new system of executive control, with a committee to advise the President on "the political premises underlying the recommended action as well as the nature, extent, purpose, risks, likelihood of success and costs of the operation."

Domestically the report found that intelligence personnel had deliberately avoided control by legal authorities—and that Presidents bad too often themselves misused the agencies. It proposed that the Attorney General have "broad oversight responsibility for domestic security

But the report relied ultimately, especially in foreign matters, on the creation of a new Senate oversight committee. It would have power over intelligence budgets, and with it the knowledge that the report said was "the key to control." The President would have to notify the committee before any foreign covert operation, explaining why it was "required by extraordinary cir-

Some will doubt that law or the legislative branch have a proper role to play on issues of national security. Senators Barry Goldwater of Arizona and John Tower of Texas, Republicans of the right, dissented from the committee report on broadly such grounds. Others will doubt that the intelligence abuses exposed in recent years are subject to control by the careful drawing of lines. They regard such things as electronic surveillance and covert operations abroad as inherently dangerous and would prohibit them altogether. The Senate committee's report is thus an attempt to find middle ground. It is a gamble, political and legal, a gamble that the American system of checks and balances can work even in the powerful secret world of in-

Once More, a Government Falls in Italy

Prime Minister Aldo Moro's Christian Democratic Government in Italy has resigned, clearing the way for June elections in which the Communist Party has a solid chance to end the three-decade domination of Italian politics hy the Christian Democrats. Mr. Moro's was the 33rd government sinca World War II.

The tightly organized Communists have been exhibiting growing strength in regional elections while Christian Democrats have been failing. Party leaders, including Mr. Moro, President Giovanni Leone and Foreign Minister Mariano Rumor, have been named as possibly involved in the Lockheed bribery scandals.

Factional squabbles among the leaders have not been resolved by the revolving-door sharing of the Premiership; Mr. Moro has led the Government four times. The party can enlist only diminishing support for its conservative policies on social issues such as divorce and ahortion or for its economic strategies which have failed to reverse the shrinking value of the lira or to relieve acute unemployment.

The Communists, by contrast, scored heavily in regional elections last year and hope to win further adherents in the national vote because of their espousal of what the party leader, Enrico Berlinguer, calls "Communism with a human face." Mr. Berlinguer last week repeated earlier pledges of respect for civil and religious liberties and for a multi-party political system.

That may prove popular with the disenchanted Italian electorate hut it is not with the more traditional Marxists in the Kremlin. Nor does it appease President Ford or Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, both of whom have asserted that an Italy governed by Communists would seriously weaken the North Atlantic Treaty alliance and the European Economic Community.

Hanoi and War's Surprises

A remarkably detailed and candid account of how the North Vietnamese planned their final victorious campaign against the Thieu regime in the South, published in conjunction with the first anniversary of the fall of Saigon, shows that the Hanoi leadership was surprised by the precipitate collapse of its adversaries.

Gen. Van Tien Dung, the North Vietnamese Chief of Staff, the author of the report, details how the northerners carefully planned the last stages of the war, which they believed would take two years, with final victory not coming until 1976.

Ahandoning earlier Communist assertions that there was a separate movement in the South called the National Liberation Front—the Vietcong to the Americans—General Dung says that the battle plans were conceived in Hanoi.

Before the fighting hegan, the general reported, the Communists huilt a 12,000-mile network of roads inside South Vietnam. It was used to supply northern troops stationed in the Sooth.

With the roads complete and companion oil pipelines and a cahle-telephone system in place, the battle plans were drawn up. A crucial question was whether the Americans, who had withdrawn their forces after the 1973 Paris agreements, would return to stem a full-scale Communist offensive. Hanoi decided correctly that they would not and launched the first attack on Ban Me Thuot. It was overrun in one day and the Communists then planned to attack Pleiku, the major city of the Central Highlands.

But hefore the Pleiku attack began, the southerners abandoned the Central Highlands in panic. The rout surprised the northerners. "Why such a retreat? And who had given the order for it?" General Dung recalled thinking at the President Thieu's decision to pull back from the Highlands has been something of a mystery elsewhere too but General Dung's report clarifies some of the circumstances surrounding it. The report quotes two captured South Vietnamese colonels as saying that Mr. Thieu reached his decision, on the basis that he could not defend the area, at a military meeting at Cam Ranh Bay the day before the panicky Central Highlands exodus began.

Election, as Planned

Vietnam's first national elections in 30 years have been carried off according to plan: Practically 100 percent of the eligible voters turned out to elect 249 deputies from the North and 243 from the South to sit in a National Assembly whose main purpose will be to formalize reunification of the country.

Because there were no non-Communist candidates, the outcome was certain and the legislature that was chosen will have no real power. That will reside with the Polithuro of the Lao Dong, or Workers Party in Hanoi, which is to be the capital of the new united Vietnam. No date has been set for completion of reunification of the country, which has been divided since the Geneva Conference of 1954 ended the seven-year war between the French and the forces led by the late Ho Chi Minh.

The Timetable For Spain

Prime Minister Carlos Arlas Navarro of Spain has announced a timetable for constitutional changes. Most political leaders in Spain seem to agree that such changes are needed soon to assure that the transition from dictatorship to democracy is accomplished without violence.

Mr. Arias neglected to inform King Juan Carlos of his proposals in advance and that reportedly has so angered the King that the Prime Minister may be forced to resign before the reforms can be put into effect. And the slow change that he has scheduled has further polarized the Cabinet and increased the difficulty of implementing any reforms.

Mr. Arias is a holdover from the Franco regime; after Franco died King Juan Carlos wanted to replace Mr. Arias with a more liheral leader but the powerful, and conservative, Council of the Realm would not permit it.

The timetable Mr. Arias announced called for a constitutional referendum in October and general elections early next year, liberal politicians have advocated a referendum in June.

The Explosion In Peking

An explosion has been reported at the Soviet Embassy in Peking, apparently killing two Chinese guards, hut it is unclear how the blast occurred and its political motivation, if any, remains a mystery.

Even at the height of the Cultural Revolution and during the Sino-Soviet border clashes on the 1960's, no incident of similar violence occurred during demonstrations outside the embassy.

A Chinese official has blamed the explosion on a "counterrevolutionary," a term applied to those Chinese who thronged central Peking just prior to the ouster of former Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping. But it is also a term used for many types of opponents in China, and thus hegged rather than answered the question of who bad set off the bomb.

Neither the Chinese official nor the Russians related last week's explosion to the prolonged Moscow-Peking dispute that appears to have gained new intensity. Last week, the Russian Communist Party newspaper, Pravda, accused Chairman Mao Tse-tung of preserving Peking's anti-Soviet policy for "no objective reason." And, just after the emhassy explosion, China's Prime Minister, Hua Kuo-feng, delivered a tough anti-Soviet speech at a reception for Robert Muldoon, the visiting Prima Minister of New Zealand.

Portugal's Vote: Little Change

Portugal's leading political parties have, as expected, so split the vote in parliamentary elections that none has a clear ruling majority. While last week's vote showed that ordinary Portuguese citizens favor a multiparty democracy, serious postelection bickering among the civilian politicians beincreased the possibility that the military rulers may stay on to influence the presidential elections scheduled for June. The military men bad promised to limit their roles to that of "constitutional watchdogs."

The hickering centers on the refusal of Socialist leader Mario Soares to form a coalition government. The Socialists topped the popular voting with 34.9 percent and Mr. Soares is insisting on leading a minority regime to fulfill campaign promises: No alliances with the Communists or the right.

As a result, the Socialists have been pressured by the other main parties to form a coalition: The centrist Popular Democrats (24 percent) threatened to withdraw from the transitional coalition government now running the country and then changed their minds. The conservative Social Democratic Center (15.9 percent) openly paid court to the Socialists and the Communists (14.5 percent) and said they will not cooperate with a Socialist-led minority government.

It is generally accepted that a divided Parliament requires a strong military man as President. There are a dozen potential candidates hut the political parties agree that the President must have the armed forces behind him.

Europe's African Legacy: Mostly Bad, Some Good

By JOHN GRIMOND

At midday on Tuesday, Central African Time, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger drove an American nail into the coffin of European colonialism. The "unrelenting opposition" to the recalcitrant whites in Rhodesia that the American Secretary of State then promised underlines the fact that Europe's era in Africa is at an end. Only one colony on the entire continent is now willingly held by a European power, the tiny French territory of Afars and Issas, and, though most of the four million whites in southern Africa are there to stay, they must do so as Africans not Europeans.

The Phoenicians first made settlements on the North African coast before 1200 BC and the Romans followed their example, hut modern European colonization of Africa did not begin until the arrival of the Portuguese in the 15th century. Even then, their activities on the mainland were commercial rather than colonial, though they did establish colonies of a kind on various Atlantic islands. The Portuguese were thus first in and, by the time of their departure from Angola last year, just about last out.

Their legacy was probably rather worse than the other European powers, but in degree rather than kind. They started well enough. Early Benin carvings show that Portuguese traders were more than welcome in that great West African kingdom. But by the 17th century the need to satisfy Europe's increasingly sweet tooth was leading to an expansion of sugar plantations in the West Indies, and with it the need for cheap lahour. So hegan the West African slave trade, which continued well into the 19th century and must rank as the greatest of Europe's injustices to Africa.

Europeans were not the only slave traders. The Arahs did brisk business in East Africa and most of the trade, both east and west, was carried out in partnership with Africans themselves. But the trans-Atlantic trade made a greater impact on African life than the Asian one; it is reckoned by some that as many as 24 million slaves were taken from West Africa alone.

Slaving, however, was all but over by the 1880's when the European scramble for Africa got underway. It was only then that Britain, France and Germany, spurred on by the land-lust of King Leopold of the Belgians, abandoned their mostly maritime activities in favour of grahbing vast tracts of territory. Portugal, unaffected by the industrial revolution, annexed what it could but had little direct interest in exploiting the raw materials of Africa or channeling surplus capital overseas. It therefore did even less for its colonies than most other European powers. Few roads were made, few mines and factories, fewer hospitals and schools. But it shared the civilizing zeal common to most of the imperialist nations of the time, which was manifest in the Portuguese colonies as elsewhere in missionary work. Unlike other nations in Africa, however, the Portuguese were paradoxically particularly color-hlind and particularly hrutal.

The Portuguese had no monopoly on brutality. Britain's colonial jails were never empty. Italy's Ethiopian war was an unusually cruel affair and, as recently as 1947, the French put down a revolt in Madagascar with the loss of some 80,000 lives. Above all, the Europeans, with the possible exception of the Portuguese, were racist, and racism has proved to be one of their most perpicious and durable bequests.

On the credit side Europe brought to Africa some kind of order—however harshly imposed—and a rudimentary administration to go with it. The African sun has proved too hot for the frail European flower of parliamentary democracy; a mere handful now exist in Africa and of these only three are multiparty systems. But the civil services left behind hy the colonialists have been adopted often with only minor changes. The systems of justice too, however much abused in some countries, owe much to Europe.

Europeans also performed one task that most Africans think was necessary and which they would have found bard to carry out themselves—the drawing of frontiers and making of countries. However arbitrary these now seem, they have been accepted by Africa and, without them, it would not today be a continent of nation-states but one of countless tribal units

Education more generally was undoubtedly valuable to Africa, yet Europe's record in this field was poor. There was, for instance, scarcely a graduate in the entire country when the Belgians pulled out the Congo (now Zaire) in 1960. And such teaching as existed came primarily from missionaries, not from colonial governments.

The colonialists' other obvious export—technology—was less useful than it might have been. Africa was chiefly helpful to Europe as a source of raw materials. Mines were dug, plantations established, farmland cleared. Some roads and railways were huit to service these projects, but even in West Africa, where colonial settlement was not the rule, they were generally run by Europeans not Africans. Thus few of the skills associated with technology were passed on until Africa became independent, and few factories were left behind.

One bequest is often overlooked, that of ataple foods. The seeds of cassava and the sweet potato brought by early Portuguese explorers for planting on an inhospitable shore have since become part of the basic diet for millions of Africans, who happen to live on a continent strangely unendowed with indigenous foods. It is even likely that the Portuguese were responsible for bringing corn—the staple throughout east and sonthern Africa—from America. Of course, such benefits could have come without the costs of colonization. One can only speculate about how Africa would bave developed had Europeans confined their interests to trade rather than imperialism. Some pain might bave been avoided, but the slave trade would not have been prevented.

In spite of everything, the ties between the two continents are still strong, both informally and through such formal arrangements as the Lomé Coovention commercially linking the nine countries of the Common Market with almost every independent country in Africa. Arguably they should be stronger. Africa is the peorest of continents, Europe one of the richest. But relations are unlikely to change greatly until, on the one hand, Africa is purged of the vestiges of white racism and, on the other, it ceases to see all overtures from Europe as veiled cries of "colonialism is dead: loog live neo-colonialism."

Panon Vest Europe's Voltommunists ed at k Soviet, Too

iscow—For all its ambitions elsewhere in the world, soviet Union has always seen its first interests in be. The priority is rooted in more than an historical of invasion from the West, as was realized twice in entury. It also reflects an envy of Western technology culture, coupled with the desire to win Europe's achieve as an equal.

... European Conference on Security and Cooperation. i Moscow pushed through last summer, after two les of trying, was meant to allay Soviet concerns about e by gaining formal recognition of Europe's postwar rs. including a divided Germany, and a pledge not to ere in the internal affairs of other countries. Yet nearly nonths later, the pieces have not been tucked away so The stability for which the Russians toiled so assiduat Helsinki and earlier at Geneva shows signs of being mined by the rising new fortunes of their erstwhile the increasingly independent Western Communist s. A particular cause of concern is the Italian Comst Party. Following the fall last week of Prime Minister . Moro's Christian Democratic Government, tha Italian unists could emerge from the expected June election ly's dominant party.

Since Helsinki, the Soviet Union has found Itself fighting a rearguard action over the Third Basket, the collection of humanitarian and other issues that were included, largely at Western insistence, in the document signed at the conference. Stung hy accusations that personal liberties in the Soviet Union have yet to reach the minimum standards laid out in the Helsinki agreement, Moscow has countercharged alleged human rights abuses by the West. At the same time, it has sought to shift ettention to the hlander Second Basket of economic provisions. In Warsaw last December, the Soviet party chief, Leonid I. Brezhnev, began by proposing new European conferences on transport, energy and environmental protection.

The Russians raised the issue again at a meeting of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, and just a few days ago Soviet Foreign Minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, brought the matter up during his visit to France. The ploy has not yet detracted from Soviet vulnerability on the human rights issue, which will he reviewed along with other parts of the Helsinki agreement at a follow-up conference in Belgrade in 1977.

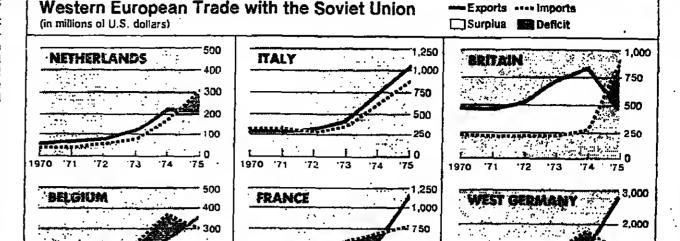

But despite the recriminations, the post-Helsinki climate is something that Moscow can live with. "I don't think they are secure about détente, but it is mostly on the Soviet-American level," one Western European diplomat said. While Soviet criticism of the United States has increased in pitch, the press has been more muted about Western Europe. Mr. Gromyko's visit to France has not been overblown, indicating that the Kremlin is content to view the trip for what it is, the latest in a series of consultations agreed upon beween the two countries. The visit, like Mr. Gromyko's trip to Britain earlier this year, helps convey the illusion that the détente program hegun hy Mr. Brezhnev can move along at its own speed.

The Fractious Allies

But Moscow is less comfortable about the new electoral surges of the Italian and French Communist parties. It goes beyond Soviet perceptions of latent ideological heresy. Communists taking power in Italy or elsewhere could sour Mr. Brezhnev's détente plans by reviving tha old Western fears about Communist intentions.

Some Western diplomats feel that Moscow wanted to see the Communists take power in Portugal last year, because the country was not part of the détente relationship, had no technology to sell and offered a Communist Party loyal to Moscow. The Russians seemed surprised by the backlash in Western Europe over the clumsy Communist bid.

But in Italy, the diplomats reason, the Kremlin cannot anticipate the consequences of Communists in high places. Even with its economic troubles, Italy figures promeotly in the Western European community. Moreover, its Communist Party keeps straying further from Moscow. It is true that the Western parties do not deviate substantially from the Kremlin on most foreign policy issues. The Russiens know that Communists in the Italian Government would create headaches for the North Atlantic Treaty alliance and the Common Market.

But there are also risks for Moscow. To stay in power, the Italian Communists would have to compromise beyond what the Kremlin is ready to allow. And if the Italians leern to play the pluralistic game successfully, they might encourage more Western Communists to try, as has already happened in France. More worrisome is the potential impact on Eastern Europeans who have been warned against permitting too much freedom. "There is a danger of infection in Eastern Europe and the Soviets are scared of it," said one Western diplomat.

A broad concern is whether the texture of East-West accommodation might begin unraveling if powerful Western political elements are alienated and even swing to the right, a fear that Moscow constantly nurses about West Germany. So far, Moscow has tried to keep the errant parties in line hy appealing to their "proletarian internationaliam," a code phrase meaning allegiance to the Kremlin that was sounded constantly at the Soviet 25th party Congress and since.

Source: Intamational Monetary Fund

But Moscow's leverage has been weakened by the proposed conference of European Communist parties, which tha Russians wanted to follow the Helsinki conference and have yet to pull off. The Kremlin may have to give more ground to woo the Italian, French, Yugoslav and Rumanian parties to a conference that would offer the appearance of Communist consensus. "It is the Soviats and not the Western Europeans who have staked their prestige on it," a Western analyst said.

Despite the initial glow of the Helsinki conference, ell is not quiet for the Soviet Union on the Western front. As long as Moscow insists upon juggling its political and ideological interests in Europe, it can only hope that one set of amhitions will not undo the other.

The consequence is that the present financial difficulties of the current Presidential candidates will be prolonged, probably until mid-May. Until then, these are their options:

They can seek individual contributions, the first $250 of each of which will ultimately bring $250 in Federal matching subsidies. To supplement their campaign incomes now, candidates can also borrow on their personal assets. And until a new statute is in effect, a candidate can also spend an unlimited amount of his own mooey.

The most felicitous schedule for restoration of subsidies would be passage of the reconstitution legislation next week, and immediate approval hy President Ford. ## Steel Prices Climb

Several of the nation's largest steel producers have raised their basic prices about 6 percent, a step that will result in higher costs for cars, appliances and construction. President Ford, however, has apparently decided not to try to persuade the producers to rescind the increase because the Administration believes that it is justified by poor steel company profits and will have only modest inflationary consequences.

Steel companies formed a main exception to the general resurgence of corporate earnings in the first quarter of 1976; the United States Steel Corporation, the largest producer and one of those that increased its prices, hed reported a 29 percent drop in its earnings for that period.

Administration officials also apparently felt that the increase was not large in relation to rising steel production costs and recent price increases posted by producers of other metals, including aluminum and copper.

Steel price rises have carried symholic importance at least sioce President Kennedy, in 1962, used his personal influence to pressure the steel companies to rollback a general increase. Some economists helieve, however, that the practical importance of such increases tends to he exaggerated.

The Ruling On Drug Agents

The United States Supreme Court has given support to a key narcotics law enforcement technique, the use of undercover agents, hy holding that a defendant may be convicted constitutionally for selling lilegal drugs even when the drugs were provided by

The decision, which limits a defendant's ability to claim that he was "entrapped," re-emphasized the Court's reluctance to expand individual rights at the expense of law enforcement officials. In other recent rulings, the Court has sided with the Government hy granting immunity to prosecutors against damage suits and refusing to find that an individual's reputation was constitutionally protected against baseless statements by the police.

Entrapment has been a controversial area of criminal law. In a 1973 case, the Court restricted the use of that defense hy ruling that, so long as the defendant's predisposition to commit the crime was established, an undercover agent's participation was no har to conviction. The ruling left open the possibility, however, that official involvement in a crime could be so deep as to "shock the conscience" and violate due procesa of law. Last week'a decision indicates that such involvement may be quite deep-to the point of furnishing an illegal item indispensable to commission of the crimewithout violating due process.

Three of the five justices in the majority agreed, in fact, that no amount of Government involvement would invalidate a conviction. The other two maintained that "police overinvolvement in crime would have to reach a demonstrable level of outrageousness before it could bar conviction," a situation which they said would occur rarely, if ever.

Acquittal For Mr. Soliah

A jury in Federal Disrict Court in Sacramento has found Steven Soliah not guilty on charges of participating in an April, 1975, hank rohbery in a Sacramento suburb. Mr. Soliah was living with Patricia Hearst and Wendy Yoshimura when they were arrested last September, and Mr. Soliah's attorneys had contended that he was on trial only because of his association with Miss Hearst and William and Emily Harris.

Whether any other persons will be charged in the Sacramento robbery is not yet clear. There were four robbers inside the hank; during the course of the robbery a woman customer was killed. The answer may depend on how much information, and about whom, Miss Hearst is willing to give Federal and state authorities in that case, and a San Francisco hank in April, 1974, former associates. Miss Hearst, convicted last month of armed robbery of San Francisco bank in April, 1974, hut not yet sentenced, has agreed to cooperate in at least some of them.

Even Though a Lame Duck, Rockefeller Is Getting Around

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.

WASHINGTON—Not since Alben W. Barkley coasted serenely through bis single term 24 years ago has the dation enjoyed the services of a lame-duck vice president, a man who knows his career in national office almost surely will end with the approaching election.

But Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller, never a conventional public servant, appears to regard the closing powerless days of a powerless office as a sort of challenge, a test of bis determination to carry on as an active and significant national leader in the face of heavy historical odds. While most of his predecessors have chosen to serve out their terms puttering around dusty offices in the tradition of Alexander P. Throttlebottom, Vice President Rockefeller is heading into his last eight months in office at full speed, travelling, speaking, fund raising and, occasionally, blundering. Last week, for example, Mr. Rockefeller felt compelled to make an apology from the Senate rostrum for baving accused aides of Senator Henry M. Jackson of Communist sympathies.

The current burst of Vice Presidential activity is all the more remarkable because Mr. Rockefellar no longer sees any prospect as he did dimly three months ago of jumping into the Presidential race if Ronald Reagan should defeat President Ford for the Republican nomination. The primaries so far have reduced thet possibility to a minimum, and with it any likelihood of Mr. Rockefeller's re-emergence on the national political scene.

Similarly, the Vice President discounts the sporadic rumors that the President may reverse himself and ask the convention to name Mr. Rockefeller as his running mete after all. Such a move would almost certainly divide the Republican delegates, some of whom will be Reagan aupporters and many of whom are traditionally conservatives. But all that has not dampened Mr. Rockefeller's personal

But all that has not dampened Mr. Rockefeller's person activism.

Deprived of a central role in the Presidential campai

Deprived of a central role in the Presidential campaign for the first time since 1960, Mr. Rockefeller is serving as President Ford's chief fund raiser luring wealthy donors to $1,000-a-ticket receptions and dinners throughout the country. He may heve raised as much as $3.5 million, the national ahare of which could supply a good part of the Ford primary campaign. hudget.

The Vice President has also given a series of serious speeches on major issues—the environment. Federal aid, religion, Periculture, energy—that present his own ideas and

Moreover, with the President occupied by the primary campaign, Mr. Rockefeller bas taken on a larger sbare of ceremonial appearances. He visited 10 nations on a round-the-world tour in March and April, made a separate "bicentennial visit" to London and has represented the United States at state funerala in France, Taiwan and Saudi Arabia, But, despite this unusually heavy schedule; Mr. Rockefeller bas not gotten much attention from the press since States at state funerala in France, Taiwan and Saudi Arabia. But, despite this unusually heavy schedule; Mr. Rockefeller bas not gotten much attention from the press since the amouncement last November that he would not he President Ford's running mate in 1976. Only one television newsperson accompanied him around tha world. "We get damn little attention now that we're out of the campaign," one top Rockefeller aide observed. "Nobody's interested in a lame-duck Vice President except as an exponent of ideas, and this doesn't seem to be the idea aeason."

It may be unusual for a Vice President to take a series of important policy positions that he has not cleared with his President, but tha view in the Rockefeller camp is that Mr. Ford invited this kind of independence when he decided to end his political identification with the Vice President.

The Rockefeller political appearances on behalf of tha Ford campaign have been low-key. The receptions are normally private, and the dinner speeches are reverentially Republican, in order not to create any openings for Mr. Reagan. The Vice President has tried to keep in close touch with party leaders, inviting groups of them to breakfast when they are in Washington. He customarily asks for any advice or criticism they might have, promising to pass it along to the President. Mr. Rockefeller sees the President at least once a week, sometimes two or three times, and they talk on the telephone more frequently.

One of the incorrigible optimists in American political life, Mr. Rockefeller is described by friends as "ataying completely loose, keeping the old options open," in case some unforeseen event should reshape the Republican national picture. He will go to the convention as a New York delegate; afterwards, he will undertake any campaign assignments the President gives him. As for Mr. Rockefeller's future after the election, one long-time lieutenant of his observed: "Nelson has never had trouble finding something

Even the Veto Changes

In the last quarter of the 20th century, however, new assertiveness by Congress is likely to be finst regularly by the President's constitutional trump care veto.

The Presidential veto was one of the principal cand balances devised by the framers of the Constitution they did not intend it to be employed as it is and is likely to be in the future. The framers envising veto much as they saw the power of Congress the veto much as they saw the power of Congress the peach, as an emergency safeguard to be used as resort to correct outrages. Franklin Roosevelt was a nof the use of the veto, and his success was not lost a successors. President Ford vetoed 17 hills in the first sion of the 94th Congress, alone.

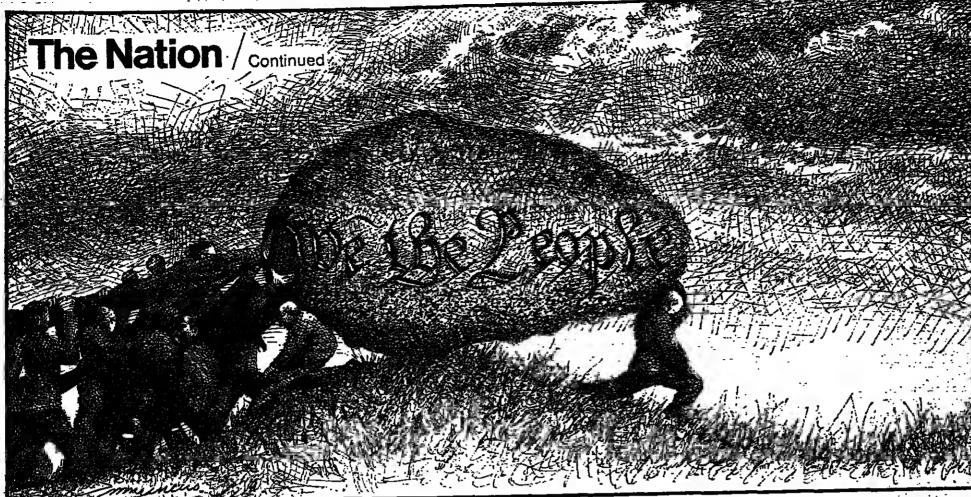

The veto, as it is now used, is still another imped to the primary role of Congress in law-making as environment of the Founding Fathers. But Congress, in the last few has developed a device of its own called the "legit veto." If Medison and Hamilton did not envision the nuse of the veto by the President, they certainly differesee this new development.

The system works in this way: Rather than pass de legislation specifying actions permitted by the President broad authority to act. But the legislation in the proviso that any single step contemplated in President can be blocked by a majority vote of either I

For example, under current law, a simple majority House or the Senate can prevent the President from 1 the price of crude oil, selling military equipment abruganting foreign aid to nations that are found to 1 human rights. The President now cannot commit trocombat for more than 60 days without an affirmative by both Houses of Congress. The word of Congress in areas is final, not subject to further Presidential a Congress added such strings to a foreign aid bill 1

The system resulted from an accommodation to r to a growing realization in Congress that it must p its strength and concentrate its attention on investiand exposing challenging and blocking. # The Framers Would Not Recognize Congress

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM

WASHINGTON—The Constitution of the United States empowers Congress "to make all laws," and the framers of the Constitution expected that law-making would be the principal function of the legislative branch of the tripartite Government. But the making of laws is no longer clearly the most important function of the United States Congress it certainly is not what Congress now does best.

Congress. It certainly is not what Congress now does best. What Congress does best, and what it often does exceptionally well, is to air the concerns of the nation, to investigate the country's institutions and disclose their strengths and weaknesses.

Thus last week the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence published two remarkable reports that revealed in extensive detail the unconstitutional excesses of the Central Intelligence Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the rest of the Government intelligence apparatus. The committee recommended a series of laws to prevent such excesses in the future. But few Senators expect the laws to be enacted.

Similarly, Congress provided a splendid forum for dissent against the war in Vietnam, but it was unable to stop the war through legislation. Congress did an extraordinary job of Investigating Watergate and exposing the abuses of Richard Nixon and his Administration. But no laws were forthcoming to assure that it will not all happen again.

Most of the laws of recent years that fundamentally affect the way people in the United States live—the iostitution of Medicare, the construction of the interstate highway system, the abolition of the draft—were devised by Presidents.

Recently Congress has been able to prevent the appointment of inferior Supreme Court justices, stop arms shipments to Turkey, and block the construction in this country of supersonic aircraft. But, lacking executive leadership, it has been unable to pass laws to reform the nation's welfare system, make its income tax structure more equitable or devisa a national health-care plan, all of which are favored by a large majority of Americans.

The Constitution grants Congress the authority to collect taxes, borrow money and declare war. In the 20th century, in fact if not in theory, those powers have been ceded to the President. Congress may alter what a President proposes, but it rarely conceives policies of its own. Two years ago, to regain some semblance of control over Government revenues and expenditures, Congress established its own budget procedure. As the debate in the House of Representatives last week illustrates, it is still unclear whether the members of Congress can comfortably unite behind a broad statement of policy to make the new procedure work.

The men who wrote the Constitution could not have foreseen the diversity that makes such a union so difficult; that the country would grow to 200 million people and stretch from coast to coast and beyond; that its economy would be based on industry, not agriculture; that television and universal education would, at the same time, bring people together and drive them apart.

Five hundred and thirty-five individuals with different constituencies and different interests, nearly all baving the primary goal of being re-elected, simply cannot set policy, and, after all, setting policy is the essence of law-making. Congress is slow and methodical, to the point of appearing plodding. It seldom acts until it perceives that a national consensus has developed, and often its perceptions come belatedly. At least some of the framers of the Constitution recognized that such would be the case.

An Erosion of Powers

Alexander Hamilton, arguing for the need for a single, strong executive, wrote in the Federalist Papers (No. 69): "In the legislature promptitude of decision is oftener an evil than a benefit. The differences of opinion, and the jarrings of parties in that department of government, though they may sometimes obstruct salutary plans, yet often promote deliberation and circumspection and serve to check excesses in the majority." If there were ever any possibility of "promptitude of decision," the framers of the Constitution scotched it hy creating two houses of Congress, each of which could check hasty action by the other.

In the last few years, the tortoise-like pace of Congress has often served the country well. Had Congress moved hastily to combat inflation at the end of 1974, as President Ford asked it to do, the result might have been disastrous, for, even without laws tightening the reins on the economy, the country plunged shortly into a deep recession. The deliberate handling of the impeachment process by the House Judiciary Committee two summers ago was of unquestioned benefit.

To be sure, throughout the history of the Republic. Congress and the President have heen on a see-saw. As the influence of one has ascended, that of the other has declined. The authority of the executive reached its height and that of Congress its depth in the decade between 1964 and 1974. But "The Imperial Presidency," as Arthur Schlesinger termed it, was damaged by the disastrous intervention in Vietnam and the exposition of the excesses of Richard Nixon. Little by little Congress has moved to assume some of the power it lost. Today, the teeter-totter is more or less even.

But there are other cases where the petty jealousies that Hamilton foresaw have resulted in foot-dragging rather than deliberation. To take a current example, it is difficult to find any virtue in the failure of Congress to act speedily to reconstitute the Federal Elections Commission and permit Presidential candidates to receive the campaign money to which they are entitled. An influential Senator, like Russell B. Long of Louisiana, can block changes in the tax taw; a strong lobby like the American Medical Associations, sometimes in both, but decisive action by Congress on major issues of controversy is rare unless the Senators and Representatives are driven by the President.

The present equilibrium is not likely to endure for long. When neither the President nor Congress is dominant, the result is more likely deadlock and compromise. All last year. President Ford and Congress jousted over energy policy. The President would make a thrust, and Congress would parry it. Congress would try a move, and the President would block it. The outcome: two and a half years after the Arab oil embargo focused the nation's attention on its serious energy difficulties, the country still has no over-all policy on energy or even a general philosophy of how the difficulties should be remedied.

A New Leadership

Next year, a new President—perhaps a Republican, perhaps a Democrat, but with a mandate from the people will be in the White House and a new set of leaders will cootrol the Caoitol. No one seems sure which way the teetertotter will go, but, whichever way it rises or falls, it seems tion can keep the lid on oational bealth insurance. Sometimes the culprits are in the Seoate, sometimes in tha likely to stay that way for some time,

First, the seats of power in the Capitol are likely to be spread about. The principal legacy of Mike Mansfield, who is retiriog as Senate majority leader, and Carl Albert, who is expected by his colleagues to quit as House Speaker, is a more democratic Congress. Fleidoms such the Ways and Means Committee in the House and the Southern conservative minority in the Senate, and party discipline as well, were weakened during the tenures of Mr. Mansfield and Mr. Albert. They justifiably take credit for many of the procedural changes—recorded votes on amendments in the House and the relaxation of the filiouster rule in the Senate, to take just two examples, but the democratization of Coogress was probably most of all a reflection of the times.

The men and women elected to Congress in the sixties and seventies are, for the most part, a different breed from their predecessors. They are less parochial and less dominated by ward and courtbouse politics—less likely, in short, to be political backs. They are better educated and more cosmic in their view of political affairs. They are elected as much on national and international Issues as they are on

.. Especially, the Startling New Man From Texa

Arthur Green for The New York J

WASHINGTON—Representative Robert Krueger of Texas has a most unlikely background for one who is the chief spokesman in the House for the oil and natural gas industries. He holds a doctorate in Elizabethan literature from Oxford and was the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Duke Unversity. He had not lived in Texas for 15 years before he returned there to run for Congress two years ago, and he has retained not a trace of a Texas accent. He knew almost nothing about oil and gas matters before he was elected to the House.

Yet, in the little more than a year that he has been in Congress. Mr. Krueger, a Damocrat, has become deeply involved in one of the most controversial and complicated economic issues in Washington, and the leader of the forces in the House seeking higher prices for oil and natural gas. Men and women who have been around Congress for years say that they cannot remember another freshman House member gaining such stature in such a short time.

Mr. Krueger's efforts on behalf of oil and gas interests have not gone unrecognized by the beneficiaries. He has received more than $50,000 in campaign contributions from those interests—more than most of his colleagues received from all sources combined—and the hulk of the money, used to pay off a large debt from his 1974 campaign, was donated after he became prominent last July.

Representative Krueger's political success illustrates an important point about the inside operations of Congress. It shows that the seniority system has been weakened to an extent that a junior Congressman can attain tremendous influence if he is willing to work hard enough.

Bob Krueger, a bachelor, was born 40 years ago In New Braunfels, Tex., into a prominent Republican family. His father owned a hosiery mill, an automobile dealership and a hotel.

The son entered Southern Methodist University in 1952 with the idea of becoming a stockbroker. But he became fascinated with Ilterature, and eventually received a master's degree in English from Duke followed by the doctorate from Oxford. His dissertation—on the works of Sir John Davles, a 16th- and 17th-century English poet—was expanded and published this year. It contains the definitive collection of Davies's poems.

Mr. Krueger taught at Duke from 1961 to 1972, when he became dean of the College of Aris and Science. The next year he resigned and returned to Texas, in part because his father had just died and he felt he was needed to run the family mill. More importantly, he saw an opportunity to run for Congress.

He could hardly have had a more difficult election campaign. Running in a West Texas district the size of Pennsyvania where he was harely known, he finished second in a six-candidate Democratic primary, won the run-off by fewer than 2,000 votes and squeaked out a victory over a favored Republican opponent in the general election.

Mr. Krueger ran for office like a race horse with blinders that sees nothing but the finish line. According to his long-time assistant and friend, Allaire George, "When he was teaching, he worked very hard at teaching. When he was dean, he worked very hard at being dean. Wheo he was running for office, he worked very, very hard at running for

Mr. Krueger says of himself, "I'm not a man of endinary brilliance. I just work harder than most per He made the "basic decision" not to marry, he says be he did not feel that he could give adequate time to work and family.

In Washington, while other freshmen were tryichange the rules of the House, Mr. Krueger set ( become an expert in energy matters. He got himse signed to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Command the Science and Technology Committee, the two most concerned with energy legislation. Then he his a tutor a Harvard senior named Bill White, who written an impressive thesis on oil and gas productit last summer there was no one in the House who tha energy issue better.

Deliberate Speed Pays Off

In July Mr. Krueger offered legislation that would lifted price controls on domestic oil. His measure win feated by the surprisingly close vote of 220 to 20. his skill in debate and command of the facts drew widespread acclaim.

When Congress convened in January, Mr. Kruege

suaded the Speaker of the House, Carl Albert, to be normal committee procedures and allow him to bri the floor a measure that would have abolished Federal lation of the prices charged by onshore natural gas ducers. For three days in February Mr. Krueger hel House floor, defending his proposal and parrying forensic thrusts of much more experienced opponent. At one point, for example, Representative Sidney R. of Illinois, normally one of the deftest of the liberal I crats in debate and a man with 13 terms of experies the House, tried to challenge Mr. Krueger's position, several exchanges, the Texan obtained the concession Mr. Yates agreed with a portion of the Krueger proj The freshman said, "Sometimes we have to take the to get a part." Mr. Yates, heaten, sank to his seat. Office was a half-smile, not unlike the look of a small who has been fooled by a magician.

On gas prices Mr. Krueger lost again, by a narrow of 205 to 201, but several of his opponents rose of House floor the next day to compliment him on the he had handled himself.

If Mr. Krueger's rapid rise to prominence surprised people, so did his campaign finances. He spent $37 in his three-election campaign, more than any other resentative elected in 1974. #### ity Unions: Peace May Not Be at Hand

Despite layoffs, wage deferrals and odest contracts, New York City bas maged to maintain peace with its our unions. Now that peace is in jeordy and the city's three-year austeriplan threatened because of two rules concerning wage agreements.

 Agreeing with his Attorney Gener-Louis J. There is also concern that other city one might strike over the cost-ofing issue at the same time. Contast for most workers—police, fire, itation and other municipal emixes—expire on July 1. They have not-living clauses now.

Now two fall grand juries will look into the ves and circumstances behind the ges and countercharges that have the public feud because the countercharges.

Last year Mr. O'Brien, the county's first Democratic District Astorney, announced he was investigating the Republican commissioner for corruption, official misconduct and unspecified "more serious crimes." He made no formal complaint. Some weeks later Mr. Kelley filed charges of sodomy,

The district attorney denied the charges and called them "politically mativated." The grand jury that cleared Mr. O'Brien is looking into the background of the Kelley charges, and a new panel will similarly investigate Mr. O'Brien's allegations.

Another Long Island politician, Marvin D. Cristenfeld, fared less well befirre the law last week. The Nassau

Cristenfeld firred contractors and consulting engineers to contribute to the Democratic party in return for county

In New York City, a retired Civil Court judge, Ross DiLorenzo, was acquitted of perjury charges in State Supreme Court in Brooklyn. The acquittal represented a setback for the state's special corruption Prosecutor Maurice Nadjari, who obtained the indictment of the judge in 1973.

Carey's Plan for Young Offenders

Governor Carey has proposed legislation to deal more barshly with violent juveniles. The measures would double the maximum sentence for serious crimes, from 18 months to three years, and mandate a minimum confinement of one year. At present there is no mandatory sentence. The penalties would apply to 14- and 15-year-olds guilty of murder, manslaughter, arson, rape or sodomy.

Whether the program will be passed by the Legislature is uncertain. Many lawmakers believe the proposals do not go far enough in protecting society from the abuses of young criminals. The lawmakers want such offenders handled by the adult criminal justice system and confined in adult prisons rather than in state training schools, an idea rejected by the Governor. Forty-five Assemblymen, including senior Democrats, are sponsoring such legislation.

gram would make New York State the first in the region to bave a mandatory minimum sentence for 14- and 15-year-olence. In New Jersey, such a youth can be sentenced to a reformatory until be is 18. In Connecticut, at the discretion of the juvenile court, a 15-year-old accused of murder can be tried in an adult court and sentenced as an adult. A 14- or 15-year-old accused of a second senious felony may also be tried in an adult court.

Mr. Carey's proposals for stiffer sentences were only a small part of a program dealing with institutionalized children. Also proposed was a "bill of rights" for such children.

Reid's Expected Resignation

Ogden R. Reid, the New York State Commissioner of Environmental Conservation, has resigned from his job, having alienated his staff and the Carey administration.

There have been charges of mismanagement from within and outside of Mr. Reid's 2,700-member department and recently three of his top assistants resigned because of professional and personal differences. The reports of administrativa failings, combined with basic policy disputes between Mr. Reid and Mr. Carey, made his position all the more difficult.

Most notably Mr. Reid has been battling the General Electric Company for contaminating the Hudson River at a time when Governor Carey is easer to keep industry from leaving the state. Earlier this year the Governor said that anyone who refused to balance environmental and economic priorities "won't be working in this government." Mr. Reid also had some troubles concerning the state's new financial disclosure requirements and leaks of confidential information concerning his holdings. But this played no part in his resignation.

Mr. Reid made beadway during his 16-month tenure. In addition to the General Electric controversy, he iniated eight major environmental bills, which were passed, and a large-scale sewage treatment project.

Mr. Reid's replacement, who was appointed by Governor Carey last week, is Peter A. A. Berle. He is a former State Assemblyman and a highly regarded environmental lawyer.

It Will Be Fought Over by Mayoralty Candidates

The City's Financial Plan Is Also a Political Battleground

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

The next mayoral election is a year and a half away, but there already exists on paper what is likely to be the seminal political document for the numerous contenders expected to seek the nffice. It is the city's three-year austerity plan, the painful and controversial regimen for slicing $1 billion in services and personnel from the budget by mid-1978.

Already the plan bas had to be dafended by those responsible for it as the bitter medicine necessary to regain fiscal health. Other politicians attack it as more poison than medicine. The austerity plan is generating new political issues daily. On one day last week the pressure of union power had to be considered as state fiscal monitors rejected the transit workers' agreement and ordered more restricted wages. On another day, the powerful school bureaucracy demanded more money from the city treasury. On a third day, budget experts were trying to figure a way around one of the more revered political slogans, "free tuitinn," at the City University.

If the plan returns the city to a mure credible financial position by cutting the deficit and avoiding the threat of defaults, Mayor Beame might bave repaired bis career enough to run successfully for a second term. If the plan fails, 1977 might be the year for a politician such as Rep. Herman Badillo. The Bronx Democrat has lately argued that bankruptcy might be a more preferable form of austerity than the Mayor's plan in the view of ordinary New Yorkers who understand city survival in terms of police, school and sanitation services rather than credit-

Mr. Badillo feels the new Federal bankruptcy law would let the city spend more on such neighborhood services by putting off creditors for longer periods of time. But the architects of the austerity plan say this only would compound the city's problem by delaying budget-balancing, extending the huge debt and further delaying the credit the city needs.

The debate is already on with politicians such as Manhattan Borough President Percy Sutton and Howard Samuels, Democrats, attacking various assumptions of the city plan and asking whether it is mainly saving the banking community at the expense of the rest of New York. This will be an inviting question next year for voters soured by the erosion of services and frustrated by the endless arcana that must be mastered if true culpability is ever to be apportioned to the politicians of the fiscal crisis.

Politically, the effects of the threeyear plan become more visible and complicated with each new shrinkage of city spending, scheduled at about $1 million a day. Politicians are trying to assess, for example, whether Republican State Senator Roy M. Goodman, another possible mayoral candidate, will be belped or barmed by his recent school aid strategy. Ha was a principal sponsor of the hill that ordered the city, over the Mayor's protests and Governor Carey's veto, to spend $150 million more on education than the austerity plan provided.

The Senator is credited by peers with having the political wisdom to cooperate with the powerful teachers union and to speak to the education issue, dear to voters. But he has become the target of editorial writers and the Mayor's counter-campaign of preparing harsh new cuts—5,000 more layoffs including 1,500 police—in case it is necessary to meet this school mandate, which is still under negotistion.

Whatever the Senator's fate, he may be the envy of other politicians whose maneuvering room has been considerably narrowed by the austerity plan. For example, the City Council, which was never that strong before the crisis, has been put in political limbo by the plan and the state Emergency Financial Control Board that supervises it. Thus young politicians like Councilman Robert F, Wagner Jr, must decide how to protect their careers from atrophy now that power and opportunity have ascended to the state level.

The politics of the three-year plan began evolving, whether intended or not, with the Governor's move at the height of the crisis last year to supersede the Mayor's fiscal powers. Accordingly, the Governor now has a career stake in the three-year plan at least equal to Mr. Beame's. Indeed, Mr. Carey's re-election year, 1978, coincides with the end of the city plan when new, presumably difficult and controversial devices will have to be found to see the city beyond that year.

In a way, the Governor already is on the line, facing and sometimes displeasing various parts of his constituency. That is why, in part, he asked the Republican Attorney General, Louis J. Lefkowitz, to share the burden with him last week of rejecting the latest transit workers wage contract.

Mr. Beame would have the relative political luxury of running a year earlier than Mr. Carey, before the plan ends. And the Maynr's latest revisinns nf the plan are striking because he has felt emboldened enough to drop the totally contrite approach of last fall and announce that he is counting on significant Federal and state actions to cover almost half the cuts in the 1977-78 year. This is not just rhetoric, for the Governor already has had to prepare for the assumption of greater support for the City University. The Governor, as chairman of the state Control Board, clearly has the largest share of political risks and responsibilities under the three-year plan.

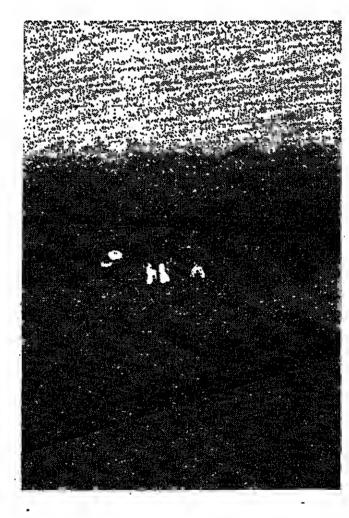

In protecting the fiscal position of the city and thereby the atate with varinus austerity measures, Mr. Carey has regularly offended union leaders, city Democratic legislators and the voters of his natural power base here. His hope is that the voters eventually will see the defense of principle involved. But meanwhile, two other city uninns have followed the teachers to Albany and scored with a bill to let police and firemen retire at three-quarters pay if they have beart trouble, regardless of whether the illness can be clearly tied to their jobs. The Maynr, a veteran nf the nld urban political world that produced such union bills, wants the Governor to veto it, bardly an appetizing prospect for Mr. Carey.

Underlying all the uncertainties and political scenarios for next year is the biggest variable of all: The city's economic life. If it should rebound significantly, the city's revenue flow might turn from red to black again and a limited version of the nld politics of plenty might displace the current austerity theme.

This seems highly unlikely, city politicians believe. But many of these same puliticians were unprepared for the fiscal crisis in the first place.

One of America's greatest success stories

Today our nation boasts the world's most bountiful agricultural system—a tribute to the family farmer's imaginative use of technology. It's one of the outstanding success stories of all time.

It's our story too.

When President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the Rural Electrification Act in May of 1936, he sparked a quiet revolution that changed the face of rural America, and the lives of rural Americans. Then, 90 percent of the people living in the countryside were milking, pumping water and washing clothes by hand . . . reading and sewing by lantern light.

Now, a vigorous network of nearly a thousand electric cooperatives spans the nation . . . providing reliable electric service when and where it's needed . . . serving some 25 million people in 2600 of 3100 counties . . . helping farmers and ranchers fill America's storehouses.

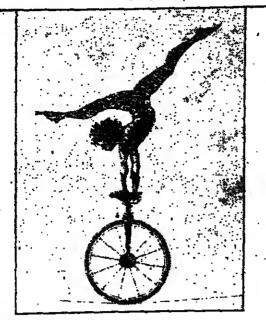

It's a story of people and the land . . . the heart; soul and bedrock of America—one of her greatest success stories.

Conflict Laws and Their Limitations

By RINKER BUCK

The practical and political diffities of living up to the demands what is called "the post-Waterera have been clearly demonated by Governor Carey's yearg error to require full finencial dosure of high officials in his curive departments. The discloe effort has already met with n bureaucratic resistance and rt challenges, and figured in the troversy that preceded the resig-, ion 'ast week of state Eovironital Cooservation Commissioner len keid.

Doctors' Challenge

A direct challenge to the disclosure effort has come from 290 physicians, psychiatrists and researchers employed at state-supported hospitals and in the Departments of Health and Mental Hygiene. The medical personnel have argued in two court suits that the executive order is overly broad and should not concern them because they hold neither policy-making nor managerial positions, Erie Couoty Supreme Court Justice Joseph Mattioa has ruled against the hoard in one of the cases, but the decision is under appeal.

The executive orders promulgated In New Jersey and Connecticut do not set a salary level as the basis for disclosure, but instead require disclosure by certain officials regardless of their salary.

Governor Carey's order was weakened by two limitations that . rendered it a modest proposal from the start. It exempts more state workers than it covers because, first, the Governor can regulate by executive order only those departmeots whose commissioners he appoints, and second, Civil Service laws prevent conditions of employment such as disclosures to be imposed unilaterally. About 1,000 state workers earning over $30,000 are exempted from disclosure by Civil Service statues. These civil servants exercise power equal to those of political appointees, and in many cases their opportunities for confilcting interests are far greater. The Governor so far has not proposed corrective legislation.

Those exempted because the Governor does not appoint their department heads include high officials in the most sensitive agencies of government, where disclosure presumably would be of greatest value to the public. In this category tre 87 attorneys and managers in the Department of Law under Attorney General Louis Lefkowitz, 33 employees under State Comptroiler Arthur Levitt, 38 officials under fidential information Such an incident occurred in March, when a board member leaked information to the press suggesting that Mr. Reid would be forced to divest his considerable stock holdings because they placed him in conflict with his regulatory functions as environmental conservation commissioner. The board had not yet acted on Mr. Reid's case, and when it did, only limited divestiture was requested. Mr. Reid has been a source of controversy within the Carey administration for months. With three of the Governor's aides sitting on the board, the indescretion appeared to be an attempt to further embarrass Mr. Reid at a time when the Carey administration was promoting rumors of his resignation.

Secretary of State Merio Chomo has called the incident "regrettable," end said it is an example of how "you can easily abuse such disclosure advises."

Measured against its intent, the results of the disclosure order have been disappointing to many in one other important respect. When he issued the order, the Governor declined, as he had promised in his first State of the State Msssage, to propose similar standards for the state's 210 legislators. Mr. Care/ said that, instead, "the executive order speaks for itself, as a matter of example.

The Legislature, which has trad.tionally been reluctions to require its members to disclose outside sources of income that supplement their $23,500 state salaries, rejected two ethics bills last year. The most extensive bill pending this year. drafted by Senator William T. Conklin of Brooklyn, chairman of the Senare Ethics Committee, is given less than an even chance for passage, Many members have seid they would like to see such measures bottled up until, as one legislative aide confided, "Warergate is no longer a household word,"

Moscow Chooses a Civilian

Many Western military experts were surprised by the naming of Dimitri F. Ustinov, a civilian formerly in charge of the Russian military-industrial complex. as the new Soviet Defense Minister. It was expected that e military man would be named to replace Marshal Andrei A. Grechko, who thought that Mr. Ustinov was selected in part to avoid adding a new member to the ruling Politburo and upsetting its meticulous political balance. Mr. Ustinov was a nonvoring member of the Politburo; his new post makes him a full member. It key military post strengthens the Brezhnev policy of detente with the West, Mr. Ustinov has been instrumental in the evolution of Soviet defense and aerospace programs since 1941.

Change at the Exchange James J. Needham has resigned as the New York

Stock Exchange's first full-time chairman, after serving for little more than a year. The resignation was appareotly not entirely voluntary. Mr. Needham has been criticized by some within the industry for what they characterize as his cool relations with members of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and with some Congressmen involved in Government oversight of the industry. Relations with Federal officials have become crucial because of plaos to create a national stock market system through the use of computers, a plan some fear as detrimental to the supremacy of the New York exchange. Mr. Needham will be succeeded by William M. Batten, currently a director of the exchange. Mr. Batten is thought to be better connected than Mr. Needham in Washington circles. Gery Hoenig

Middle Class Can't Afford College Cost

n April 21 The New York Times printed two editorials which should be of interest to all who are concerned with education. The first editorial, "Closing College Doors," commented on the announcement by United States Commissioner of Education Tertel H. Bell that he intends to resign on August 1. Bell's resignation is a serious blow to the education community, for he worked effectively with Congress, teacher organizations, parent groups and school boards. Bell is leaving his top U.S. education post to become Commissioner of Higher Education in his home state of Utah.

Bell told President Ford the major reason for his departure was that be could not afford to send his three children through college on his U.S. Commissioner salary of $37,800. His new job will pay $11,000 more than his present one.

The Times editorial correctly points out that Bell's experience is shared by hundreds of thousands of others. College education is becoming impossible for middle-class young people because of the vast increase in costs. (The very rich can still afford it. The very poor are eligible for special financial assistance.)

The American Association of State Colleges and Universities has published a "Low Tuition Fact Book - 1976" (evailable from AASCU, 1 Dupont Circle, Washington, D.C. 20036) which shows that while more high school students are graduating each year, fewer of them are going on to any college: "The rate of fulltime college going is declining among low and middle-income families! This is true even though the number of college students is increasing each year." U.S. Census date show that between 1969 and 1973 there was a 20 per cent drop in the percentage of 18 to 24-year-old dependents from families earning less than $15,000 going on to any college on a full-time basis. In the same period there was an 8 per cent drop in the percentage of students going to college full-time from families earning more than $15,000.

Bureau of Labor Statistics figures show that very few families have the funds to meet college costs. "BLS esumated that a four-person family with a $9,189 income in fall 1974 would have about $415 a year in 'miscellaneous' fuods left over for education and other expenditures such as recreation, reading material, alcohol, tobacco, etc!" says the AASCU publication, adding:

"A four-person family with an income of $14,333 would have about $662 left over for education, recreation, and other purposes. Since living costs have risen since 1973 at a faster rate than salaries and wages, most families, of course, are relatively worse off in 1976 in terms of available income to pay for a college education." (The autumn 1974 intermediate budget for the four-member urban family permits weekly expenditures of $70 for food, $65 for housing, $20 for transportation, $20 for clothing. Costs have risen since then.)

This closing of the college gates to so many must be reversed. The Times correctly pointed out that "Nothing less is at stake than the future of an open, upwardly mobile society." Low tuition must be maintained wherever it now exists. Wherever there is high tuition, it must be reduced.

But on the same day. The Times had another editorial, "Elusive Pay Freeze ...," in which it called for rigorous enforcement of the wage freeze on employees of our school system and those of the Transit Authority. By urging that these wages remain frozen, The Times is advocating the payment of salaries to low and middle income employees which would make it impossible for them to send their children to college.

If Commissioner Bell cannot afford to send his children to college on $37,800, how does The Times propose that employees of the Board of Education and the Transit Authority manage it on their salaries, which range from $6,000 to $21,000?

Today is Solidarity Sunday for Soviet Jewry, highlighted by a dramatic march of tens of thousands of New Yorkers - men, women and children of every race and creed - down Fifth Avenue in support of the struggle of Soviet Jewry. This past Wednesday, the Delegate Assembly of the United Federation of Teachers adopted the following resolution "In Support of Solidarity Sunday for Soviet Jewry."

"WHEREAS the United Federation of Teachers wishes to express its solidarity with Soviet Jewry in their struggle for civil and human rights and their right to emi-

"THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the United Federation of Teachers urges all members to join with labor and other organizations in the March for Soviet Jewry to be held on Solidarity Sunday. May 2."

We urge all New Yorkers to join this important demonstration for human rights. The general public is asked to assemble at 71st Street and Fifth Avenue at 10:30 a.m.

Week of Decision...

The dramatic political events of the last week brought the Democratic Party's Presidential picture into sharp focus. By winning the Pennsylvania primary, former Gov. Jimmy Carter reached a dominant position in the struggla for the nomination and forced Senator Henry M. Jackson to suspend his campaign.

When Senator Hubert H. Humphrey announced two days later his refusal to become an active candidate, Governor Carter's best-known potential opponent suddenly disappeared. Mr. Humphrey recognized realistically that a cootest with Mr. Carter would be a hard bruising fight that might seriously divide the party and lessen the value of the nomination. Moreover, baving served as Vice President and as the Presidential nominee, Mr. Humphrey quite understandably did not want to risk ending his national career with a defeat that might be seen as a bumiliation.

Despite the absence of a vigorous Humpbrey challenge, Governor Carter's progress toward the nomination still has obstacles to overcome. Representative Morris K. Udall remains an active candidate. Since only ten of the thirty primaries have yet been beld, it remains distinctly possible that Representativa Udall-who ran Mr. Carter a close second in New Hampshire and Wisconsin-could upset the front-runner in one or more of tha remaining states. The odds are against such a comeback; but as long as Mr. Udall remains in the campaign and on the hallot, he cannot be ruled out.

In Nebraska on May 11, Senator Frank Church has the first opportunity to match himself against Mr. Carter. Other candidates are leaving them a clear field. The conventional political wisdom downgrades Senator Cburch's chances hut until they have heen tested, Governor Carter can take nothing for granted.

... Challenge to Carter

Perhaps the most dangerous threat to a Carter nomination is the candidacy of Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, In Governor Brown's appearances in Maryland last week, his first political swing outside his own state, tha handsome young California Governor drew sizable crowds and a lot of enthuslasm. Since he, too, is a non-Washington outsider with a fresh, unorthodox style, Governor Brown competes with Mr. Carter on his own

It is probable that Governor Brown made his move too late. The Maryland primary is not until May 18 by which time Mr. Carter may bave won several additional primaries and have acquired an unassailable lead in pledged delegates. Nevertheless, the Brown candidacy adds the yeast of uncertainty into what would otherwise be a fairly predictabla outcome.

Four years ago, the results of the Pennsylvania primary completed the destruction of Senator Edmund S. Muskie's candidacy and converted the Democratic contest into a two-man race between Senator Humphrey and Senator George McGovern, with the latter established as the favorite. The primary in Pennsylvania last week appears to have been equally significant. Since Governor Carter is now as strong as Senator McGovern was then and his assorted rivals offer considerably weaker opposition than Mr. Humphrey did, the pattern of the future aeems evident.

Probably the only man who can deprive Mr. Carter of the nomination now is Mr. Carter. The coming weeks will test his ability not only to continue his winning ways in the primaries but also to reconcile and knit together tha many factions, interest groups and significant personalities of the complex coalition that is the Demo-

In the words of the report: "Investigations have been based upon vague standards whose breadth made excessive collection inevitabla. Unsavory and vicious tactics have been employed—including anonymous attempts to break up marriages, disrupt meetings, ostracize persons from their professions, and provoke target groups into rivalries that might result in deaths."

The F.B.I. was not alone in the use of such tactics. The National Security Agency, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Intercal Reveous Service, Army Intelligence and other agencies were also busy keeping dossiers on private citizens, maintaining lists of potential detainees and otherwise ignoring the Bill of Rights.

The report makes it clear that these abuses were not the monopoly of just one party or administration. On the contrary, the pattern was one of bipartisan resort

Election in Italy

Italy is now on the road to its most critical election since the founding of the Republic in 1946-with no assurance that the contest will dissolve the political stalemate or produce a government capable of leading an economic revival. With the failure last week of a last-ditch bid by the ruling Christian Democrats for all-party backing of an emergency economic program, the fall of Prime Minister Moro's minority Government became inevitable and June elections all but certain.

The Communist Party will doubtless improva on its impressive showing in local elections last year, when it climbed to within two points of the Christian Democrats, who bave beaded every postwar Italian Government. Some polls indicate a possibility that the Communists this time will dislodge the Catholic party from first place and even gain enough ground to make possible a leftist coalitioo between themselves and the Socialists.

At this stage, however, the Communists would be reluctant to launch such a coalition. They have almost a morbid fear of bringing on Italy the kind of polarization-and eventual military intervention-that doomed Salvador Allende's left coalition in Chile. They would much prefer to enter government as the junior partner of the Christian Democrats io what they have called a "historic compromise" between Communists and Catholics.

There is always the chance, bowever, that the Christian Democrats, hitterly divided, tarnisbed hy corruption and weakened by recent allegations of payments to party leaders by multinational corporations, can pull themselves together and win another election, mostly by emphasizing the Communist threat. What seems less probable at the moment is that new leaders, untainted by past party failures, will then come forward to guide Italy back to political stability and economic recovery, even with massive aid from the United States and Italy's European Community partners.

In any event, for the duration of the campaign, the less public advice the Italians receive from outside governments-especially the United States-the more likely they are to vota with discernment and good sense next month.

Simplicity of Science

Physicists have begun questioning one of the fundamental postulates of modern science, the notion that nature is inherently simple at the most basic level and that the seeming complexity at any given moment is merely the consequence of man's ignorance. One theoretical physicist speaking at the recent American Physical Society meeting in Washington suggested that tha ultimate reality may turn out to be as chaotic as the most unstructured of Jackson Pollock's paintings.

The believers in the ultimate simplicity of nature have numerous triumphs of understanding to buttress their view. Ptolemy's scheme of planetary motion, which reigned supreme for almost a millenium and a half, was a conglomeration of cycles, epicycles and other ad hoc expedients to try to explain the observed motions of the planets. Today, as the intellectual beirs of Copernicus, Kepler and Newton, scientists know that almost all the observed pattern follows directly from Newton's law of gravitation, which can be stated in elementary algebra.

So, too, with heredity, long the subject of bewildered and bewildering speculation uotil Gregor Mendel first enunciated the laws that govern beredity and then Crick and Watson showed the hasis of these laws in the iogenious but fundamentally simple mechanism of DNA's double belix structure. All the properties of the more than 100 known elements, so complex and difficult to understand at first, are now comprehended as the natural consequences of the specific patterns of electrons around the nuclei of the different elements.

In the face of these and other great triumphs, why are the advocates of ultimate simplicity now oo the defensive? The reason ironically is tha chaos that has emerged in the most fundamental science of all, particle physics, which seeks to ascertain and comprehend the basic nature of matter itself. But bere the awful fact is that the more that Is learned, the more complex the reality turns out to be.

A long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a tha ultimate. Then atoms were decomposition of the long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo spoke wistfully of a long time ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo ago meo electrons, protons and neutrons, and their bizarre "zoo" of exotic particles for which no evideot rhyme or reason. So the dilemma remains. Edna St. Vincent Millay once argued that Euclid alone has looked on beauty bare; today despairing physicists suggest perhaps Jacksoo Pollock alone grasped reality in its full complexity.

A Case Against Oil-Company Divestiture

To the Editor: Proposals to eliminate vertical integration in oil companies call for regulations oo one industry not imposed oo other industries. Politically motivated schemes that create discriminatory barriers against one segment of U.S. industry set precedents that are oot in the public interest. They will result in less efficiency in the oil industry and in reduced ability to compete for supplies of oil with foreign companies. Further, they fail to address a major problem facing the corporations began existence vertically integrated. Most large corporations started out as small ones performing one function. They expanded into other functions for a variety of reasons, usually to increase efficiency, to become more competitive by reducing costs, to minimize risk or to grow. Corporations became vertically integrated for sensible economic

In the extractive mining industry, for example, many corporations began their existence with a mineral discovery. After mining started, it became apparent that unless the miner also had the ability to extract metal from worthless rock, to transport it and to fabricate it into a useful product, the miner was at the mercy. of those who do so at a profit.

Failure to integrate forward to these functions reduces the miner's flexibility and the efficiency obtained from effective integrated management and forward planning. This efficiency helps the consumer and is a factor in the intense international competition for raw materials.

A pressing national need is to have a rational energy policy. Oil company divestiture is an emotional political response that masks the lack of a national policy. We must devise a national energy policy that balances the need for conservation, sufficient production of energy sources and protection of the environment. Devising politically motivated discriminatory legislation that attacks one of the things the U.S. oil companies do best, namely, perform efficiently, does not address this need.

It is appropriate to bave concerns about other matters, such as concentrated economic power, social responsibilities of corporations and the oecessity for corporations and politicians alike not to make and take illegal bribes. Let us assure ourselves oo these concerns in a manner that will address these concerns, and not muddle those issues with the energy MURIEL MATHEZ

Of Defense and Waste

As the 1976 Presidential campaign beats up, some important misstatements about our defense budget are showing up. Spokesmen like Terence McClary of the D.O.D. claim we are falling behind the U.S.S.R. in most military categories. I believe weapon comparisons are meaningless. How can we equate soldiers with rockets with ouclear bombs? We must compare populations, land masses and borders to make even elementary sense out of comparisons.

We are blessed with two open land borders with friendly nations, borders that have always been unprotected, plus two wide oceans. The U.S.S.R. is completely surrounded by traditional enemies like China and Turkey or satellites like Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland, which require standing armies and tanks to keep under control.

Obviously, a military dictatorship like the U.S.S.R. will need its 3.8 million protective army, against our 2.1 million army.

The D.O.D. says that the U.S.S.R. could build fifteen major bombers every year, while we are building none. The truth is that our country is the world leader in both aircraft and engine coostruction and has a major supply of civilian aircraft to modify if needed.

Thoughtful Americans have begun to ask this question: "What are we really getting back for spending billions for the military"? Is 26 cents of every tax dollar really needed for our long-term safety? How can we avoid wasting the billions that we did on that ICBM silo in Dakota, which is now inoperative?

We should begin shifting millions away from D.O.D. to the State Department. That's where nonmilitary diplomacy has at least a chance for maintaining even an uneasy peace.

No Hope for Whales

To the Editor:

The massacre of the great whales is one of the most borrible and tragic of man's blunders, and its occurrence today is utterly senseless.

The United States would do well to negotiate sternly with Russia and Japan to spare from extinctioo wbat are oow tha last remnants of a magnificent and wonderful species. Unfortunately, the Administration shows no intention of doing so.

Tha present Administration has manifested no interest in the wbales' plight beyond the sending of an ineffectual delegation to the annual meeting of the International Whaling Commission, a fatuous organizatioo whose grim and irresponsible decrees, reading like star-chamber verdicts, cater extravagantly to a rapacious industry and with flagrant disregard for the whales allow each year a quota of destruction that is inordinate and disastrous. The 1975 meeting was no exception, assigning 32,578 whales to slaughter wheo the intelligent move would have been to ban all whaling.

A year ago a glimmer of light for the whales appeared in Coogress with the introduction by Representative Alphonso Bell of his pertinent bill, H. J. Res. 448, which, if enacted, would promptly give considerable protection to the whales by imposing an embargo on any industry angaged in commercial whalekilling. Last summer the State Department unaccountably voiced opposition to the Bell bill before the House subcommittee that was conducting hearings on it. The bill is still lingering in subcommittee, no actioo on it having yat been taken after a year of hearings and deliberation, and the inexcusable annihilation of the whales goes on. Whether or not the State Department's incongruous behavior bad any actual effect, its opposition to a bill that would offer the whales some prospect of survival was unconscionable folly. Hardly less absurd and equally frustrating is the House subcommittee's interminable, indecisive dawdling over a bill that warrants immediate enactment

Death Amid Plenty To the Editor:

One is saddened when reading a news item citing the recent death of two elderly sisters—the cause given as mainly malnutrition amid plenty. Their physical and mental condition precloded any belp from themselves. Outside belp therefore was oecessary to discover their condition.

Police mention uncashed Social Security checks dating back to 1973. It seems puzzling to ma that the Social Security Administration, with all the advanced technological know-how available, cannot devise a method to locate checks uncashed for a period of three years and find out why. #### To Help Vietnam To the Editor:

On April 30 one year ago, pean finally came to Vietnam. For the Vie armese and for us, the years of war were a terrible ordeal. Whether one that the U.S. involvement still believes that the U.S. involvement was a heroic effort to curb Commen nism or, quite the reverse, is conviace that we made a grim and terrible mistake, the fact remains that we have an overwhelming obligation to remove the scars of war and restore the health of this once peaceful, self-sufficient country. How trage for our integries as a people if now we turn our back on the damage that has been wrongs, and, in sharp contrast to our role after World War II, take no thought for the travail of our former enemy.

One can understand how we all would like to forget the whole mess, business, pretend Vietnam was simple a bad dream. But our Government ha ... gone even further than this, refusin to recognize the Government of Viet nam, denying the duly constitute authorities' membership in the Unite Nations, by our veto, and making difficult (for a time impossible) to shi even medical supplies and agriculture equipment to Vietnam. ## Black Rule in Rhodesia: Some Implications

By George F. Kennan

PRINCETON, N.J.—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's action in associating this country with the heavy pressures already being brought to bear on the white Rhodesian regime to accept what is optimistically called "majority rule" is of course receiving wide acclaim throughout the Western liberal world, including the editorial columns of The New York Times, and appears even to have won from African leaders elsewhere on that continent those grudging nods of approval that American policymakers seem to fmd so important to the interests of this

So far so good. But may one not wonder about the reality of the goal to which we are being here committed? The implication of Mr. Kissinger's statements, as of so many others of these urgings, is that all the Rhodesian whites have to do, in order to assure to themselves the hlessings of a happy and prosperous future, is to move over and accept their place as a minority of the citizenry in a democratically-governed country where race is of no im-

wings a number of African resistance leaders who, despite the encouragemeet they have had from Marxistextremist sources, are united among themselves, moderate in their aims and methods, committed to the ideals of democracy as we understand it, and fully prepared to accept the permanent presence in their country of 200,000 or 300,000 whites and to extend to the latter all the normal benefits of democratic citizenship. But it would be bard to find the precedent for such a miracle in other black African countries.

And if it does not mature, is not what we are likely to encounter the more familiar syndrome of violence, civil war, the ultimate flight' of the white population, and an ensuing period-indefinite in duration-of lowcred living standards, educational standards, and standards of government, for those, the Africans, who are left behind?

There are, I know, many in the West for whom these prospects hold no terrors. For them, as Angola has receotly demonstrated, the miseries of people of European origin thus displaced from African homelands inspire no sympathies. And as for the hlack Africans: The blessings of being ruled by other matic about this assumption. Possibly, black Africans rather than by people

I suppose, there do indeed stand in the of European origin are held-perhaps lities; but they are real ones. And the correctly, who knows?--to compensate for any and all adverse effects of such a series of developments.

But there are still two complications to be faced.

First, if the answer is not to he some form of genocide, then the people displaced are going to have to go aomewhere: and it could reasonably be argued that those who call in effect for their displacement should be prepared to accept them. It seems unlikely that we are so prepared; and one could ouestion whether it is the proper part of this country to connive at the creation of new problems that othersin this case presumably the South Africans or the long-suffering British-would then be expected to solve. Secondly, the establishment of some form of hlack rule in Rhodesia cannot fail to inflame still further the situation in the neighboring South Africa and its dependencles. But here, we must remember, the pattern being so cheerfully recommended for Rhodesia would not work at all-or, if it would, then only at a cost in bloodshed so appalling as to rock the stability of international life and to invite the reenactment of horrors we thought we had left behind a generation ago.

question to be asked is whether the uncertain favor of other African leaders is really worth the risk of assuming to the American conscience further hurdeos of this nature, in addition to those hy which it has recently been so grievously encumbered.

These reflections will no doubt be taken, in the atmosphere of simplistic emotionalism that surrounds the discussion of these questions, as the expression of a sympathy for the policies of both Rhodesian and South Africao regimes, as we have known them in recent years. This, actually, they are

They are, however, the expression of certain doubts that I believe to be shared hy a number of others who have tried to look closely at the problems of southern Africa: doubts as to whether these truly tragic problems are susceptible of solution by violence rather than by the processes of gradual and peaceful change, and doubts as to whether outsiders, acting from the hackground of their own concepts and experiences, would be in a good position to decide what forms that change might most usefully take.

Behind the Great Wall of China

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS — Russia has always been difficult for foreigners to understand, as confirmed since the early nineteenth century in such memoirs as those of France's Marquis de Custine or diplomatic dispatches like those of American Minister Neill Brown.

Observers frequently seek to read omens into the Byzantine precedence granted political leaders. Since the 1917 revolution this method has applied especially to relative placement in posters displayed on public holidays

If Russia is hard to fathom except by reliance on totemism, China is far worse. The great wall of secrecy makes it almost impossible even for Sinologists to be certain what is taking place.

It is therefore interesting that Peking has just published the first photograph of Chairman Mao's new hierarchy since the overthrow of Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping, once presumed heir apparent. This picture seemingly indicates the Central Committee's radical faction has successfully clung

Among those described as having gloriously performed meritorious exploits for the party and people" during Peking riots two days before Mr. Teng was ousted, are: young Wang Hungwen, the Sbanghai radical, who follows Mr. Hua in formal listing: Chang Chunchiao, hitherto considered "antirightist"; Chiang Ching, wife of Chairman Mao; and Yao Wen-yuan, one of her supporters.

Of this quartet, the closest to Mao and maybe the most influential is Chiang Ching. On Dec. 5, 1966, André Malraux, well-versed in Chinese affairs and de Gaulle's special envoy to Peking in 1965, told me he regarded as immensely important the announcement of Mrs. Mao's appointment as cultural consultant to the Chinese Army's general political department.

The Chairman has had three wives. He divorced the first. The second was executed by Chiang Kai-snek. Chiang Ching, the third, had been China's leading movie actress when she joined Mao in northwest China. Thereafter she stayed out of the public eye. Mr. Malraux consequently considered her new post as significant, indicating Mao's determination to control the army directly and also to terminate

A month after Mr. Malraux the foreign press began to notice the former Shanghai film star. The London Sunday Telegraph wrote: "Her staggeringly swift rise to her present key position as first deputy leader of the Cultural Revolution' bas concentrated immense power in her hands."

She certainly has retained her husband's confidence, Last Thursday David Bonavia, correspondent of The Times of London, commented in a dispatch datelined Peking: "It is clear that the ailing Chairman has been shamelessly manipulated in the interests of his wife's old grudges."

One now wonders if the clique of "radicals," apparently more powerful with or under Mr. Hua, bas fresh ideas about warming up relations with Moscow. Certainly the Kremlin ia engaged in trying to find that out.

On April 28 it signaled that if China re-examined Russia's standing "package of constructive proposals," the existing quarrel might be healed. Does Chiang Ching agree? She has never shown much enthusiasm for the American connection. And, if she does agree, can she influence ber old husband to change his mind before he dies?

The answer still remains negative even though strange things are going on. Who, for example, has just exploded a bomb outside Moscow's Peking Embassy-and why? And what has this to do with any diplomatic implications of the internal Chinese contest to succeed Mao? Finally, If any change is in the air, why did Prime Minister Hua on April 29 denounce Russia as "the most dangerous source of war . . . wildly ambitious hut inwardly weak"?

A Wise Choice For H.H.

DALLAS-Texas provides a better example than most states of how difficult it would have been for Hubert Humphrey to have wrested the Demo-cratic Presidential nomination from Jimmy Carter of Georgia in a latestarting campaign in the last few pri-maries and for the "uncommitted" delegates.

In the first place, given the crushing victory Mr. Carter won in Pennsylvania, wheo the vote count is completed in Texas's complicated primary he may well have grabbed off a hig percentage of this state's 130 delegates, too-eveo against the favoriteson slate of Senator Lloyd Bentsen. As Jobo White, the Texas Secretary of Agriculture and the chairman of the Bentsen campaign put it the other day: "It all depends on how Walter Cronkite tells it after Pennsylvania. If be seems to think Carter has the cominatioo locked up, that'll have a big im-pact in Texas." Mr. Cronkite, like other television commentators, seemed mightily impressed with Mr. Carter's Pennsylvania performance.

Now Mr. Humphrey's withdrawal from such contection as be had permitted so far can only increase the Carter "momentum" here and in Indiana and other primaries Tuesday.

But even a victory for the Beotsen slate in Texas would not necessarily be more than a temporary setback for Mr. Carter and it might not have been much of a plus for a Humphrey candidacy, if there were one. While many of the hackers of the Bentsen slate, including Mr. White, are favorable to Mr. Humphrey, theirs was by no means a "holding for Hubert" operation but was, indeed, a ticket unusually balanced among conservatives regulars and liberals, white, blacks and Mexican Americans, women and young

IN THE NATION

That the delegates it elected would not automatically have been available to a Humphrey campaign Is suggested hy several factors other than Mr. White's disclaimers. One is what the Carter chairman-Land Commissioner Boh Armstrong—calls "the Baptist bridge, the agrarian bridge." That is, a Georgia farmer whose religious leanidely shared in Texas, would be a strong campaigner here in November-probably stronger than Mr. Humphrey, who barely carried the state in 1968 with a healthy George Wallace on the ballot to split the conservative vote with Richard Nixoo.

Since the Bentsen slate included many elected officials who must run with the Presidential nominee in November, they clearly would have thought twice before jumping into a last ditch "stop Carter" movement on behalf of the liberal Mr. Humphrey. Even Senator Bentsen, who faces a hard re-election campaign against Representative Alan Steelman of Dallas, might consider Mr. Carter preferable to his Secate clubmate at the top of the Texas ticket.

Gov. Dolph Brisco, moreover, nominally the head of the Bentseo slate, is sympathetic to Mr. Carter from the latter's days as a fellow Democratic governor-so much so that his praise for Mr. Carter has confused some Texans as to wbom their Governor really supports.

In other states, of course, uncommitted and favorite son slates obviously would have been more readily available to a Humphrey campaign. But Texas will have the third largest Democratic delegation and will be a hattleground state against either Gerald Ford or Ronald Reagan; its likely streogth for Mr. Carter would have been a major problem for Mr. Hum-

Since Mr. Carter, barring unforeseen goofa, should walk off with most of the rest of the primary states-save possibly California, if the Jerry Brown campaign develops from its good beginning in Maryland-Mr. Humphrey also would have had a hard time keep ing uncommitted delegates off the Carter bandwagoo until July; and in New Jersey, the one state, after Pennsylvania, where he might have mounted a major campaign, he faced the problem of Gov. Brendan Byrne's preference for Mr. Carter-and even a victory there might have heen too little and too late to stop Mr. Carter.

With hia undiminished self-confidence. Mr. Humphrey might well have thought he had a good chance to overcome these difficulties-and maybe. with some luck, he did. Even so, a stop-Carter campaign would have been, at best, devisive; a Humphrey victory would have risked reopening old party wounds and painful political charges; and a Humphrey defeat, in New Jersey or at the convection, would have put an inglorious period to a career that deserves better.

So in the end Hubert Humphrey had the personal courage and discipline to make the wisest choice for his party and for himself. Much depends, now, on whether he can stand hy that decision against selfish and divisive party pressures still to come; and on whether Jimmy Carter is willing to seek a gracious and constructive peice with the man who still could make or break a party unity unseen among Democrats since 1964.

Beyond Quarks, Something Even Simpler, Perhaps

Whenever the simplest known ex-planation for the observed facts becomes more complex, scientists have suspected that a yet simpler explanation is still to be discovered. The view has now been expressed that quarks, thought by many physicists to be ultimately indivisible units of matter, may eventually be found to be another intermediate structure.

In the 1930's, protons and neutrons, the "heavy" particles that make up the nuclei of atoms, were thought to be ultimate. In postwar physics, however, hundreds of other beavy particies were discovered, and scientists doubted there could be that many kinds of ultimate particles.

In 1962, quarks were hypothesized as the ultimate building blocks of "hadrons," the whole class of heavy particles. Since then, the number of kinds of quarks required to explain observed phenomena has grown. Quarks now come in three "colors" and four "ilavors," and some physicists expect to encounter more. Eight varieties of "gluons" are needed to express the forces that bind quarks together into badrons.

Moreover, unlike other subatomic particles, quarks cannot occur alone, only in combination as hadrons. Therefore they cannot, or at least so far have not, been actually observed.

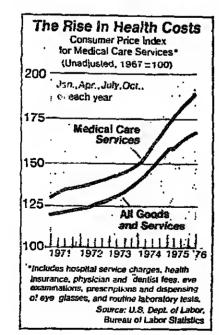

Speaking at a briefing for science writers as a convention of the American Physical Society, Dr. Sidney D. Drell, deputy director of the Stanford linear accelerator, drew an analogy between quarks and the ether, a substance once thought to fill all space and have only the property that electrootagnetic radiation was propagated in it. No one had observed ether, but science could not do without it until Einstein's special relativity theory made it unnecessary.

"As we strengthen our commitment to the quark concept," Dr. Drell said, "we are also multiplying their variety to the point that it is already being asked: if there are so many different kinds of quarks perhaps we must view them as complexes of yet deeper underlying entities occuring fewer in kind . . . and indeed our quest becomes one of finding what underlies

The Doctors Fully in Control

The President's Council on Wage and Price Stability says a monopoly-like control by doctors over medical services and a "passive" role by patients in purchasing the services are helping to push health care costs up at a record rate. There is a lack of the competition and coosumer concern present in other economic sectors, a council report says.

The study was made because of the council's concern about the inflationary effect of rising health care costs on the general economy. A series of public hearings is to be held, but whether anything will be done is questionable. Changes would require oew legislation, and Congress bas shown little interest in health meas-

When a persoo goes to a doctor, the council noted, it is the physician who determines the nature and extent of the services to be provided. Because of the traditional doctor-patient relationship, the patient rarely questions the decisions. If the patient is sent to a bospital, insurance covers most of the cost. As a result of these factors, the council said, the consumer tends to be less aware of health care costs than, for example, food prices. The average American family now spends 10 percent of its income on health care, and health costs represent 8.3 percent of the gross pational product. Last year total costs reached $118.5 billion, 40 percent paid for by Federal, state and local governments. The cost increase in the health sector last year was the biggest ever on an annual basis, 10.3 percent. The Con-sumer Price Index for other services rose 7.7 percent. Health costs were held relatively stable during the 1971-1973 period by a wage-price freeze.

Education That Lingers

A statistical study designed to determine whether formal education actually educates bas coocluded that it does.

For their book "Toe Enduring Effects of Educatioo," sociologists Herbert H. Hyman, Charles R. Wright and John Shelton Reed analyzed 54 national informatioo surveys taken by various polling groups between 1949 and 1971. Though none of these surveys was originally designed to test the effects of educatioo, they included data on the age, educational attainments, social background and other relevant factors oo a total of 80,000 iodividuals.

The researchers found, unsurprisingly, that persons with more education were better informed, both on facts usually acquired in school (what planet is nearest the sun?) and facts learned after school (who is Nelson

But the researchers were also able to use the social data contained to the surveys to compare, for example, persons who had gone to college but whose parents were blue-collar workers, with persons who had not been to college but whose parents were professional. In this way they found that even when the effects of such factors as current or childhood social status are excluded, education itself is responsible for increased knowledge and locreased receptivity to new knowledge, even in later life.

Saving Plants For Posterity

The National Plant Germ Plasm Committee, a group of agricultura! experts concerned with preserving plant genetic strains, is working on recommendations, eventually to be submitted to Congress, for a number of plant "repositories" throughout the United States. Varieties of . crops, such as fruits and nuts, which are vegetatively reproduced rather than grown from seed would be grown there against possible future uses for their genetic material.

In recent years, modernized agricultural methods which make widespread use of only a few crop varieties have driven out many older and more genetically various strains. Though modern strains are more productive, the danger of their widespread and exclusive use is that a whole crop of genetically ideolical plants could be affected by a disease to which it lacks

Many repositories already exist to preserve rare genetic material in the form of seeds. About 90,000 seed samples are preserved in cold storage at the National Seed Storage Laboratory at Fort Collios, Colo., and about an equal number are thought to be preserved in the Soviet Union. The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization also stores about 10,000 samples at Izmir, Turkey. In additioo, there are many special collections worldwide for such crops as corn, rice, beans, and several tropical products. But because seeds of most grain crops can be stored for 25 to 50 vears without being grown for renewal, seed storage is less costly than the preservation of living plants is expect-

Religion Out, Religions in at Many School

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS

When the Supreme Court outlawed devotional Bible readings and prayer in public schools in 1963, objections were heard from those who believed religion had been banished from the classroom. Since that time courses in religion have been introduced extensively in elementary, juoior high and high schools as objective studies. This trend is now a subject of debate.

What one educator calls a "revolution" in the curriculum of schools, the religion courses are the consequence of the less publicized portion of the Supreme Court's majority decision.

"It might be well sald," wrote Asso-; ciate Justice Tom C. Clark for the majority, "that one's education is not complete without a study of comparative religion or the history of religion and its relationship to the advancement of civilization.

"It certainly may be said that the Bible is wortby of study for its literary and historic qualities," Justice Clark said, adding that nothing in the Court's judgment should impair such instruction "as part of a secular program of education."

Implementation of this directive began shortly thereafter and, with the active cooperation of religious, civic and educational groups, has blossomed ioto a major educational endeavor.

Though national statistics are not available, an indication of the growth of religious studies can be drawn from data from sample regions. Duriog a recent seven-year period in Peonsylvania, for example, the the number of courses increased from 700 to 12,000 according to the Public Education Religion Studies Center at Wright State University in Ohio. A study of an 80mile radius around the California State University campus at Northridge found that 80 new courses had been added in a four-year period.

Pennsylvania, Michigan, Florida, Wisconsin and California have set the nace, pioneering new curriculums, exploring ways to equip teachers for the seositive subject matter and coofronting the difficulties that come with integration of religion into school pro-

Advocates of religious studies contend that knowledge of Biblical image ry and religious bistory is essential to a rounded education and an antidote to religious intolerance.

Opponents, who include some of the most conservative religionists and the most liberal secularists, argue that religion cannot be taught without bias Fundamentalist Christians have fought inclusion of courses on the Bible on grounds that Scripture should only be imparted as truth. Atheists and agnostics worry that children might be sold a set of religious commitments in the process of gaining an appreciation of religious traditions.

"The desired neutrality may not be realized," the Catholic Bishops of Pennsylvania said in a recent joint statement, "since what is required is not just neutrality of the textbookhard enough to achieve-but more important, neutrality of the instructor." Some people are concerned that the policy of teaching religion, objectively might be violating religious freedom.

At the Bicentennial Conference on Religious Liberty in Philadelphia last week, William B. Ball, a lawyer who has been involved in many religiousliberty cases, said, "The religious liberty question centers on: What is belief to the believer? And that is a burning question indeed."

Organizations with special interests in developing the means of teaching about religion are attempting to bring order to a largely random pattern of growth. Leading the way are the center at Wright State, which is the most advanced clearing house for research and information, and the National Council on religion and Public Education, with headquarters at Ball State University in Indiana. Professionals in the field concede that far too many religion teachers are ill prepared, curriculum materials are too seldom sensitive or accurate enough and that insufficient progress has been made toward creating adequate educational standards. But they defend the right to teach the subject, believe it can be taught objectively and say most parents support their "Religious illiteracy is just like economic illiteracy," says Dr. Daryl B. Adrian, executive director of the National Council on Religion and Public Education. "We are plainly talking about religious literacy, not about developing a religious philosophy. Our approach has nothing to do with teachiog values."

Wright State's religion chairman, Dr. Nicholas Piediscalzi, says flatly, "A student can't study culture without studying the religious dimensions of. culture. We have usually omitted reli-Some schools teach separate courses in areas such as the religion of Western culture or the Bible. The more common method is to introduce relevant materials in social studies or English classes, Thus, religious factors in the settlement of the New World would presumably be taken up in history instruction while examination of biblical imagery might precede study of a novel that makes use of Scripture images, such as John Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath.'

California, Michigan, Wisconsin and Vermont have courses for accreditation of religion teachers. Otherwise, teachers seeking greater competency rely on summer courses, periodic conferences and self-study plans.

Religious studies have won approval from a broad spectrum of religious and educational groups, including Americans for the Separation of Church and State, The American Association of School Administrators and the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Gaining wide public acceptance may

Tryout Day for Women's Team and Male Coach Hazards

By TODD LOGAN

Last fall, I coached the women's tennis team at Clark University, a small New England college. Although the tenhis season was scheduled for nine matches in six weeks, my toughest day as coach was the first: team tryouts.

Twenty-six women turned out for 10 places. As a former athlete, 1 knew the most traumatic experience for any player is not making a team. Frequently, coaches were capriclous in their decisions, exacerhating the anguish of a rejected athlete. Thus, I was determined to conduct fair tryouts. Also, unlike other coaches, I intended to notify each woman personally of my decision, instead of cowardly posting names on the gym bulletin board.

At 9 A.M. the day of tryouts, 26 women assembled on Court One. A glance at the women showed they were an eclectic group. Some wore designer-made tennis dresses, some wore cutoff blue jeans and T-shirts, some wore Chris Evert warmup suits and one wore an extremely revealing halter top hurst-ting with intrigue and possibilities.

My introductory speech started auspiciously, I promulgated my egalitarian beliefs on the nature of team tryouts. I pledged not to be a "win at all costs" coach.

As I was extolling the virtues of team tennis, the cliche-nidden advice of all my previous coaches crept into my speech, inexplicably, I blurted, "We have a tough schedule, women, but remember, all our opponents put their parts on one leg at a time." They winced and so did L Togetherness Is Taboo

That embarrassing remark was fol-lowed by "A good attitude is sacrosenct to winning: Teams that play together win together." Six women stood up and left. Unnerved, I confidently assured evers attending the wrong meeting. Thus, concealing panic, I began tryouts. On the first court, I evaluated each woman's ground strokes, serves and volleys. On the other two courts, 1 eryone that the six walkouts were fencmatches. Four exhausting hours retrieving ten-nis balls and 83 round-rohin matches later, six women emerged as the best players. I congratulated them for making the team and excused them for the day.

I still needed four women from the remaining 12 to complete my roster.
Two had voluntarily withdrawn from the competition: One lost 33 straight round-robin games; the other suffered a black eye from an errant ball toss. The remaining women presented a difficult problem. They were all equally bad, and by then my enthusiasm had plummeted. Had it not, I might have enjoyed the challenge of finding a potential Billie Jean King In that motley group. Instead, I subjected them to more round-robin matches.

One woman left early, casually remarking. "I'm playing in the finals of the tournament on the Island tomorrow." I assumed she was just trying to impress me. Well, whatever, it worked. She made the team.

While the other women battled for tennis oalls we the last three positions, I scrutinized their styles of play. Aside from tennis ability, I sought players who exhibited Surprisingly, the qualities essential to any championship team: natural athletic ability and team spirit.

My natural athlete turned out to be a 5-foot-2-inch, 130-pound cannon-ball who could not hit a tennis ball. But, after every other game, she hurdled gracefully over the net. I awarded the token team-spirit position to the only woman who called me "coach." The 10th position hecame a showdown hetween the two of the remaining eight women who had won the most games during the round-robin competition.

I instructed the two remaining women to play a one-set match. One woman, Jane, was short, overweight and unattractive. After every point, she glared at me with an expression that distinctively read, "I know you're going to cut me hecause I'm ugly."

Swinging and Swaying

Barbara, her opponent, was the candidate wearing the provocative halter. She, too, tried to sway me. However, the revealing, if somewhat backbreak-ing, manner in which she picked up tennis balls went virtually unnoticed.
As a happily married man, I secretly

Surprisingly, their match was well played and close. Down, 5-4, Jage staved off two match points and finally had her own match point at 6-5. During a spirited point, Jane rushed the net oehind a deep approach shot. Barbara threw up a desperation loo. My dowdy favorite scrambled back to return the lob, which landed six inches within the baseline. Instead of returning the well-placed lob. Jane caught the ball and yelled, "Too bad, just out." I unabashedly congratulated her on being a great clutch player.

That fall, my tennis team posted an impressive 8-I won-lost record against such New England stalwarts as Providence, Assumption and Stonehill. My natural athlete, who leaped tennis nets, tripped the third week and croke her leg. The woman with the team spirit qolt because she was not starting. ## Rutgers's Critical Basketball Coach and What He Really Meant

The recent letters criticizing Coach Tom Young of Rutgers for his comments following the National Collegiate semifinal haskethall game against Michigan strikes us as both absurd and malevolent, Young's observation that the Scarlet Knights "stunk the place out" was not an example of poor sportsmanship but rather represents two phenome-

First, Young presented an accurate and honest perception of what was undoubtedly the Knights' worst game in two years. Second, Young obviously felt the very real sense of frustration that his excellent team was never given full credit for its quality because of a so-called weak schedule.

Rutgers has not received the media recognition it deserves; it is invariably and invidiously compared to its ly League neighbor in Princeton by such individuals as Coach Pete Carril, of Princeton, who has arrogantly cast as-persions on the intellectual ability of the Scarlet Knights. Indeed, in spite of the poor press the team has received-let us not forget that its 31-0 record made it one of two major undefeated teams in the country -Tom Young's comments were rather mild. We feel that he should be complimented not only for his qualities as a coach and his honesty, but also for believing in the rather unconventional idea that a collegiate athletic program should be subordinate to the real business of a university, namely scholarship and teaching.

ALBERT L. RECORD HENRY PLOTKIN Highland Park, N. J.

Coach Wins No Prize For Use of Grammar

To the Sports Editor:

Several letter writers were highly critical of Tom Young for his churlish remark that "We stunk the place out."

No doubt he deserved the criticism for not accepting defeat more gracefully. He certainly should have been critieized for his fractured grammar, of which no representative of an institution of high learning should be guilty, not even an athletic coach.

Maybe he shouldn't have said it at all, but if he did, he should have said, "We stank the place out."

HARRY ROBERT Maywerd, N.J.

Coach's Reaction Called Refreshing

To the Sports Editor:

Coach Tom Young spoke plainly and bonestly when he assessed the performance of his team in that game, as did his players, many of whom echoed his sentiments. His statement was a straightforward evaluation devoid of the xcuses and empty phrases so frequentheard from most coaches. The loss was embarrassing, it was even momentarily demoralizing, but it could not dim the true pride and thorough enjoyment this fine group of young men brought to all of us who for so long have enoured the belittlement of Rutgers' athletic achievements.

The team and Coach Young can be certain that for every casual critic of his action there are hundreds, no thousands, of us, who appreciate the refreshing honesty of a coach and players who knew what they did and for once had the guts to say it like it was.

E. THEODORE STIER Chatham Township, N.J.

Eastern Basketball Returned to Esteem

To the Sports Editor:

For Coach Tom Young to express the fact that "We stunk the place out" was both candid and refreshing. There is no disgrace in playing a bad game and admitting it, as Young and his players did after that bitterly disappointing game. However, that cannot tarnish Young's contribution in returning Eastern basketball to the highest national level of competition without trampling on the iodividualism of the athletes of his team.

To the Sports Editor:

As Red Smith and Dave Anderson uppear to see it, everything Marvin Miller does is right, everything baseball does is wrong.

Smith asks what baseball would be without a reserve rule. "Have they ever tried it?" The answer is "Yes," in 1875. century ago, true enough, but as real as tomorrow. That year, William A. Hulbert, the Chicago owner, tapped the Boston Red Stockings, pennant winners for four straight seasons, and lifted its Big Fnur (Spalding, Barnes, McVey and White) through an offer of sizable salary increases. The result: Chicago won the 1876 flag with the second highest percentage in the National League's hundred-year history.

Boston came hack to win in 1877 and 1878. In 1879, Providence reeched into the Boston lode and filched George Wright and Orator Jim O'Rour e, both

That winter, Arthur H. Soden, president of the twice-riddled Red Stockings, presented the reserve rule, and could blame him. It has been in force ever since.

Red Smith and this writer testified before the Celler Committee on Monnpoly Power, which investigated the reserve rule in 1951. The writer told the committee that the rule was the rivet that held the game together. Red agreed. He testified that the reserve clause was "essential" to the operation of baseball for many "good rea-sons." Questioned by the committee counsel (now Supreme Court Justice), John Paul Stevens, Red added, "I think as far as fans are concerned, they would like to see the best possible baseboll preserved on pretty much the same basis as it now occupies."

I feel Young's statement was a spurof-the-moment reaction to the continuous criticism of Eastern basketball in general and the Rutgers basketball schedule in particular. Perhaps Young could have been more tactful in his appraisal of the game, but it is this honest approach that has earned the respect of his players. It is this honesty that enables him and Rutgers University to keep athletics in their proper perspective, wheo many coaches elsewhere violate recruiting regulations.

He Told the Truth And He's Criticized

To the Sports Editor:

Tom Young was correct wheo he said his Rutgers team "stunk the place out" against Michigan. But Young was speaking of one game and one game only. Those who are hlasting Young for blowing college athletics out of proportion are perhaps guilty of that transgressioo themselves. To transform his comments into white-hot evidence of . what is wrong with college sports is totally absurd.

Is a man unfit to coach or does he lack class simply because he reacts to a disappointing defeat by telling the truth, even if that truth is not totally complimeotary to himself and his team?

All too often, Rutgers has been accused of ignoring sports and enhancing only a ademic pursuits. One of tha first smal changes to strike the eya this morning when customers at the 102d Derby began smuggling pot and potables past the gatemeo was a complex of barbed-wire eotanglements that would repel a tank atack. Mounted cops were another innovation. So was a new cyclone fence paraleling the backstretch, taler and stouter than the one the infield crowd tore down last year. So were regular Army military police from Fort Knox who beefed up the security force provided in the past by National Guardspersons and city and county cops.

All together, these measures made Bombay Duck as big a factor in this year's race as HonestPleasure, Bold Forbes or any of their seven challengers. Bombay Duck finished last in the 1975 Derby after being bit by a beer can flung by somebody in the center field. and that incident prompted management to take steps.

Management Gets Nervous

Not only was the fence surrounding the kraal toped with harbed wire, hut coils of the wicked stuff ran along the hase of the fence to snag any small boy trying to squirm under. More entanglements flanked the pedestrian tunnel between the grandstand and the infield.
As always, cops and military armed with loog hardwood batons patrolled the premises in bordes. The fuzz comes in two sexes at Churchil, and the noticeably larger number on the distaff side spoke wel for the progres of women's lib in Kentucky.

Management takes en ambivalent ettitude toward the infield crowds. The bras exults over hig gates, and since seats in the grandstand and clubhouse are always sold out, attendance totals depend on the crowds in center field. Two years ago, for instance, when the 100th Derhy drew a record 163,628. about 90,000 were on the grass within the oval. At the same time, management worries about these clients, for they are mostly kids of college age and when they get tanked up they can easily become a mob.

A few years ago when streaking was the vogue, one clear-eyed youth after another scaled the flagpole and, on attaining the summit, celebrated hy peeling down to his helt. Cops who tried to collar descending streakers were shouldered aside. It was the only topless and bottomless Derby, for after that race the flagpole was uprooted and moved to a fenced-off area in front of the tote board.

Comrades on the Grass

Another Derhy crowd was entertained by two parachutists who sprang from a plane over the track. One landed in the ceoter field, where police attempted to move in but were defeated when at least 10,000 young admirers surrounded the aerialist. His companion was blown off course, landed on a rooftop beyond the harn area, and wound up in the slammer. "How did you peck him out?" somebody asked the cop who made the pinch, "Just grabbed the first guy that came along carrying a parachute," Sherlock said.

Shenanigans like these make management oervous. For several years now, it has been forhidden to carry alcoholic beverages through the tunnel, although mint juleps and beer are sold there. A stroll through the area turned up empty bottles labeled Jack Daniels and Ca-

"If you had a thermos bottle they paid no attention, but they make you open coolers, and if you had Cokes on top they dug down under the ice. I tried three times to get through and couldn't. so whanever I saw a good-looking chick gave her a beer. Then I came through.' There's a lot of foxy-looking ladies here," his companion said. "That's what I'm here for. The hell with the horses." A flag of gold and gray with a white Maltese cros flew over a group of picnickers. This, it was explained, was the emblem of Sigma Chi, and the Derby was part of Sigma Chi's grand slam. To make the grand slam, a fraterolty member must attend the New Orleans Mardi Gras, visit the Bahamas or Fort Lauderdale during spring vacation, and follow the Derhy with attendance at the Indianapolis 500. "You see," one of the hrothers explained, "it's diferent sports -motor racing, horse racing, lady racing and the spring hreak to fresh you

Other garments hore college names-Marshall, Kent State, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Western Kentucky or "Derhy No. 102" or "Honest Pleasure Wire to Wire" or "When We're Hot We're Reds Hot," for Cincinati's baseball champions.

As in the past, they were happy kids, hairy, hare, sunhurned and friendly. Unlike their anti-establishment predecessors of just a few years hack, they never oinked an oink at the cops in their midst. Indeed, they posed for snapshots with arms around the fuzz, not even pausing to remove the wineskins slung over young shoulders. Because of rain in the vicinity, though there was none in Louisville, the $10 customers arrived later than usual and the infield was rather sparsely populated during the early races. By 2:30 P.M., however, clearing skies had encouraged the doubtful, bringing thousands of laggards in to drink fast in a gallant effort to catch up. Frisbees soared, kites flew, bodies were tossed on blankets, radios blared, love ruleo supreme. Betting is a sinful occupation but, romping on the grass is fun.

An agent recently told Ward that it was management and not the players who first set up the money num-bers. Ward was told, "It's you people who atart the bidding. We just go along." Riggins has special appeal to many coaches because he is a 1,000-yard a season full-back and only 26 years old. Many N.F.L. offenses are predicated on defense and offensive hell control the late. offensive ball control, the lat-ter coming from a Riggins or a Csonka-type fullback who averages four yards every time he bas the ball.

Riggins began to exercise the option clause of his contract before the 1975 season began and one reason was the dominance of Joe Namath the Jets' scheme. That bothered the country boy from Kansas among others. As the losing season played out Riggins, who gained 1,005 yards, was more than twice as valuable to the team than Namath, who ranked 27th out of 30 regular N.F.L.

With a free market at hand it is a wonder there are not hundreds of free agents rather than two dozen. But no one foresaw what would hap-pen: that the owners would lose the Mackey antitrust case in court and have to let the compensation rule go by while awaiting an appeal.

To have gained free-agent status a player had to forgo signing a 1975 contract last year and allowing the option year in his 1974 pact to run out. Expertism was midout Expiration was mid-night last Friday.

It seems unlikely that any appeals court will allow the owners to reinstitute the Rozelle rule, which made many teams reluctant to sign free agents because they were not sure what they would have to give back in compensation.

Pete Rozelle, the commissioner, says that some form of compensation must be reinstituted in the next contract currently being negoti-ated between the owners and the players' association. This bargaining has been baseball. Fran Tarkenton was not of that mind. The game's lead-ing quarterback, Tarkenton last week got the Vikings to extend his not considerable pact for two more seasons.

The player who has exploited free agentry best is Gilliam, Tarkenton's favorite receiver. He played out his option in 1975 and joined the World Football League for a smart raise and boous. When the Chicago Fire folded last fall he was free again and signed again with the Vik-ings. It is time to go for 35-year-old Roman Gabriel but he is not going to take his big Eagles' salary with him. Another quarterback, Pat Sullivan, wants to get out from under the shadow of Steve Bartkowski at Atlanta and few can blame him. Similarly Ed Marinaro seeks a larger place under the sun than the one the Vikings have given him. Ken Ellis, an able, angry cornerback at Green Bay, got his wish to be traded and weot to Houston in the recent deal for Lynn Dickey. But the Oilers still must sign Ellis. Two tight eods believe they are worth more money, Larry Brown, formerly of the Steelers, and Jean Fugett, lately of the Cowboys. Brown's cause was not enhanced wheo Pittsburgh drafted the best college tight end, Bernie Cunningham of Clemson.

The Brown and Fugett cases probably as well as any bring the oew market into focus. Confident athletes have varying perceptions of their financial worth. The unsung Brown and Fugett may he dealing with reality while that trio of Jets, Lewis, Piccone and Sowells, are living among illusions.

Harvard Crew Is Victor

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 1 -It was te same old story at the Compton Cup race on the Charles River today as the Harvard varsity crew won the prize for the 14th year in a row. The undefeated Crimson eight beat Princeton by 6.5 seconds, or one and onehalf boat lengths, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology by 10.4 seconds. Princeton, which came to the regatta undefeated after three races this spriog, disappointed. The Orange and Black fell behind early and oever challenged Harvard in the second 500-meter section of the 2,000-meter course, which was the place to do it. Goiog under the Massachusetts Avenue Bridge at the halfway mark Harvard was comfortably ahead by one length. The second half of the race was uneventful. It was the kind of race that Harry Parker, the Harvard coach has seen dozens of times before. The victory was Harvard's 25th in a row and the last time a Crimson varsity eight was defeated in in-tercollegiate competition was at the Eastern Sprint championships by Northeastern in 1973. The time for the victors was excellent, S minutes 48.9 seconds. That was six-tenths of a second over the course record set by last year's Har-vard varsity in this event. A strong tailwind on the river was a contributing factor to this fast time. "We just took it away from them," said Parker, and that was so true. The coach had high praise for his stroke oar, Oliver Scholle from Hillsborough, Catif. who rowed a cool race. But the Tigers and the Engineers never gave him much to worry about, M.I.T. earlier had beaten Columbia and lost to Boston Universi-

In the lightweight varsity race the Harvard crew defeated Navy to win the Haines Cup. Huskie Crew First Special to The New York Times .

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 1 - Northeastern's varsity crew defeated Brown and Columbia today on the Charles . River. The Huskie eight defeated a stubborn Brown boat by one leogth while Colum-bia trailed 27 seconds behind the victors. It was Northeastern's first triumph of the season after close losses to Yale and Boston University when closing sprints fell short. This time the Husikies led from the start. But Brown, which bad lost its two earlier races to Harvard and Boston Univeraity, stayed close when its oarsmen had every excuse to ease op. Columbia was out of the race after 500 meters. Northeastern's time was 5 minutes 57.5 seconds, or 8.6 secoods slower than Har-vard's time in winning the Compton Cup over the same course 30 mioutes later. But the aiding tailwind was stronger when the Crimson boat rowed over the river.

The second varsity race was also won by Northeastern over Brown. Columbia did not bave a second varsity hoat to enter. In the fresh-man event Brown surprised with ao easy three-length vic-Sprint championship at tory over the Huskies, while Princeton on May 16. Good hockey to the Quebecois means fast skating and the Canadiens have elways tried to be true to their nickname, "The Flying nickname, Frenchmen." Perhaps the most graceful

The Most Subjective Sport

LANDOVER, Md., May 1—The beauty of boxing, as Muhammad Ali and Jimmy Young proved, it that it's the most subjective sport of all.

What you see is what you think But sometimes it's what you want to see or what you're supposed to see. That appeared to be the basis for the judgment of two of the three officials last night io scoring the world heavyweight cham-Sports

ital Cantre like far-off thunder. Oo my scorecard Jimmy Young woo, 68-67 in points and 8-7 in rounds but there is no quarrel with anyone who thought that Ali woo by a close margin, say 8-7 or even 9-6 in rounds. It's even under-standable that Judge Larry Barrett had All ahead, 70-68 in points and 7-5 in rounds with three rounds even. It was that kind of fight. No knockdowns. No particularly damaging punches. No obviously objective situations. Its subtleties demanded a subjective viewpoint.

ties demanded a subjective viewpoint. But the other judge, Terry Moore, had Ali ahead, 71-64 in points and 11-4 in rounds. The referee, Tom Kelly, had Ali ahead, 72-65 in points and 10-4 in rounds while virtually ignoring the champion's habit of muscling Young by leaning on him. But when Young ducked through the ropes to avoid Ali's assaults, tha referee quickly scolded the challenger. He never cautioned the champioo.

'His Worst Fight'

The only explanation for the arithmetic of those two officials is that Terry Moore and Tom Kelly were influenced, perhaps subconsciously, hy Ali's reputation rather than his per-formance. They appeared to believe that if the champion did it, then it must be correct because he is who he is. Ali did force the tempo, but Young foiled the tempo, frustrating and exasperating Ali, who clearly was overweight at 230 pounds and overconfident as a 15-to-1 betting favorite.

Ali survived what Angelo Dundee, his trainer for 15 years, braoded "his worst fight." Angalo Dundee's opinion is important because re seldom criticizes the champino publicly.

"He was missing, he had no timing," the trainer said. "And the other guy was making him miss. Jimmy Young is awkward. He staods and crouches. He's a hard guy for my guy to fight."

Ali's hoxing physician, Dr. Ferdinand Pacheco, another usually stauncr defender of the champion, was critical not only of Ali's weight, but also of his casual overconfideoce.

"He was more than just overweight," Dr. Pacheco said. 'This repetitive fighting saps him of his desire to get into proper shape. Tris was the worst ha's ever taken an opponent. But be was dancing in the ninth and 10th rounds, wasting energy just to satisfy the public. In a couple of rounds, he wanted to knock Young out but couldn't. Give credit to Young, he was fighting a legend and he did very, very well."

In retrospect, Dr. Pacheco listed 225 as All's proper weight for the Young bout. Ali, 230 at Thursday's weigh-in, probably was 233 in the riog.

"He was getting tired a lot sooner than usual," Dr. Pacheco sald. "His reflexes were only 25 to 30 percent of what they should be."

Ali agrees now. That's probably the worst possible development for Richard Dunn, the hig Englishman who can punch but c an't take a punch. Dunn might bave had a soeaky chance to ambush Ali in Munich in three weeks, hut now Ali presumably will train with mora determination, After Ali is scheduled to tangle with Antonio Inoki, the Japanese wrestler, in Tokyo late next mooth, then oppose Ken Norton in September, possibly at Yankee Stadium under the auspicies of Madison Square

"The big trouble is in Tokyo," Dr. Pacheco warned. "Any wrestler giving an honest effort is very dangerous. When a wrestler gets you down on the mat, you're in his ball game, his won't you cancel in Tokyo? "Six million dollars," be said, meaning his guarantee there.

Ali, assuming that he disposes of unn, would be wise to cancel his Tokyo appearance, relax for a few weeks, then begin serious training for Nortoo, who bloodied and stopped Ron Stander in the fifth round of their onesided sham on last night's card.

The Actors

Ali also is expected to btain a $6 million guarantee eagainst Norton in what the champion calls "the real fight." Because of Ali's clumsy performance against Young, some people believe that Norton, who can move as well as Young and punch much harder, will dethrone Ali easily. Norton holds a 12round split decision over Ali, who suffered a broken jaw in that Sao Diego bout, and lost a close hut unanimuos 12-round decision at Los Angeles in a rematch. But the 30-year-old part-time motion picture actor isn't deluded by the Ali he saw last night.

"That's not the guy I'll have to fight," Norton said. "I wish it was, but it won't be. He'll be ready for me." After that, win or lose, Muhamad Ali is talking about retiring from boxing and becoming an actor himself. They want me to play me io the movie of my life." the champion was saying, "Imagine that, you never heard of anybody else who wasn't an actor being asked to play themselves in a movie. "If someone put up $1 million for my franchise right now," said Bill Bereman, owner of the Indiaoa Loves, "he'd hava it." In fact, no team has ever made money in W.T.T.

Indiana lost the least money last year, about $80,000, mainly because it had the smallest payroll. New York lost the most money, shout $500,000. Hawaii lost about $180,000, Pittsburgh about $375,000. There is no real way of knowing what each team lost because the league does not require each team to file an eccouoting state-

But if any team, were to make mooey this year, Indi-aoa would be the best het. Its payroll is the amallest, about $160,000. So while Bereman keeps the gate when the superstars from other teams play in Indiana, other owners keep the aspirin handy when the Indi-ana No-Names come joto

Sets to Lose Money

New York, which opens its bome seasoo tomorrow night agaiost Cleveland, will not make money this year, espe-cially not with the highest cially not with the highest payroll in the league, about $400,000. The approximate salarles of the Sets are: Billie Jean King, $130,000; Virginia Wade, $90,000; Sandy Mayer, $55,000; Fred Stolle, $55,000; Phil Dent, $50,000; Lindsey Beaven and Linda Siegelman, $8,500 each. $8,500 each.

"No way in hell we make money this year," Berg said. "When W.T.T. makes it, New York will be the last team to make money. But we cut our losses from about $850,-000 the first year, and we'll cut our losses again this year. In the long run, we'll make it."

the long run.

"This year could be critical," said Bereman, who is personally optimistic, "if the growth isn't as expected, and some owners decide to bail out."

Ticket Sales Up

W.T.T. has strengthened itself in the glamour departmeot by signing people such as Rod Laver, Chris Evert, Martina Navratilova and Ilie Nastase to go along with players such as Billie Jean King, Virgioia Wade, Evonne Goolagong, Marty Riessen, Tom Okker and Vitas Geru-

With the continued absence of male stars such es Arthur Ashe, Jimmy Connors, Bjorn Borg and Guillermo Vilas, it continues to be a femaledominated league. But as Saody Mayer of the Sets said, "If you want to see the womeo play tennis in the summer, you've got to come

The standard W.T.T. cootract guarantees that each player is available to play all 44 matches, a far cry from the first season, when Connors signed for just 18 matches with Baltimore, or last season, when a player had to be available for just 33 matches.

And the league is no longer subsidizing player contracts, although the nine other own-ers must contribute a total of $50,000 to Soi Berg again this year as part of the deal that sent Billia Jean King to the Sets last year. Another part of that deal had all 10 owners contributing a total of $50,000 last year to Dick Butera when his Philadelphia Freedoms folded and the team shell was moved to Bos-

'The King deal was some-thing wa had to live with for two seasons," said Don Kel-leher, the Hawaii owner. "It's over this year."

The average salary—there is no minimum — io the league is about $40,000 for the three-month season, excluding playoffs. The five highest paid players are Lav-er, about $165,000; Miss Goo-lagong, about $150,000; Miss Evert, ahout $140,000; Mrs. Kiog, about $130,000 and Nastase, about $125,000.

But there are problems. Although King said justifia-hly that TV was not essential oow, sioce the hudgets ere small enough that an average attendance of 6,000 in most cities can mean a profit, only the all-star game is due for national broadcasting.

"It's about time someone took the league spart for those conflicts," said Fuhrer, the Pittsburgh owner. "We need a good spanking. As far as Taylor goes, we ought to hire him full time as the league publicity man. We ought to get a full-time counsel too.

"As far as King goes, we've got to get a strooger administrator and move the league headquarters to New York. If King doesn't resign, we ought to fire him. That conflict is ridiculous; It hurts our credibility."

How to Choose the Proper Surf-Fishing Equipment

High Tides Around New York

By NELSON BRYANT Every year at this time, a spate of letters arrives asking what gear to use when surf fishing for striped bass or bluefish in the northeast.

Although some might wish to go lighter, and others have heavier, the best allround spinning rig would be one designed to handle 20pound-test line, and its equivalent in conventional, or revolting spool, gear would be a 26-to-30-cound outfit. In both instances, the reels should hold at least 200 yards of the line being used.

Those buying their first surf fishing equipment should make sure that rod, reel and line are matched. To put it another way, a rod designed for 12-pound-test line and lures up to two ounces will not function properly with 20-pound-test line and 31/2 or 4-ounce lures.

Surf rods vary in length from about 7 feet to 11 feet and more, but a good choice is one of 814 or 912 feet with enough backbone to handle lures of 1½ to 4 ounces. No rod will oo everything, of course, and one that is stiff enough to take all you this writer always carries two surf rods to the beach, one a 20-pound spinning rig and the other, a 30-pound conventional. The spinning rod is used for the lighter lures and popping plugs. The popper, which bluefish usually adore. needs a fast retrieve and a medium or light action rod.

There are those who prefec 12 or 15 pound outfits. Uoder ideal conditions, these light rigs are adequate, but their real drawback comes when the angler so equipped is in a row of other fishermen. Because his gear is light, ha cannot control his fish from one spot and must follow him downtide forcing the other men to reel in and get out of the way.

can give it when casting a 4-ounce lure is going to be somewhat unresponsive to a It is for this reason that If transporting a long rod is no problem, a one-piece stick is probably best. They are usually less expensive than the two-piece versions and bave no ferrules where the joint is made—to stiffen or weaken the rod. Whether conventional or spinning, make sure that the tip-top and the next two guides down are Carbaloy or some simi-larly tough material, for ordinary chrome-plated steel guides will pick up linedamaging grooves at the end of one season of hard fishing. Metal ferrules are the most common way of joining a two-piece rod. If your rod has metal ferrules, take it apart at the end of each day's fishing and apply a little light oil to the ferrules frequently. If you fail to do this you will wind up with a onepiece rod before the end of the end of the season, foc the corrosive effect of salt water will bind the two parts together.

There are many good mass-produced surf rods, and nearly all surf fishing areas have a shop that turns out its own rods from glass blanks. The Garcia Corporation has recently produced a line of high-quality, two-piece surf rods, both caventional and spinning, which are superior in finish, durability, design and power to any rods of their kind this writer has encountered. They are joined by a glass spirate a short by a glass spigot a short distance forward of the reel seat, eliminating the problem of corrosion and of stiffness in the wrong place.

Another thing to check in surf rod is the distance between the reel seat and the end of the butt. Personal preference, length of arms and body build enters in from reel to but end. A shorter butt is easier to

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY Special to The New York Times DENVER, May 1 — "When you worry about how another team is going in play you, yo uopen yourself up fin some serious trouble," said Larry Brown the coach of the Denver Nuggets, before his team's playoff opener against the New York Nets tonight.

Brown, the American Basketball Association coach of the year, has prepared his team fo rtheir final by drilling them i ntheir own game, not New York's.
"Our team is pretty adaptable." Brown said. "We should be ready for whatever they do."

Denver, one of the original franchises when the ARA franchises when the A.B.A. was founded in 1967, finished in first place in the seventeam league this year with a 60-24 won-lost record. They were particularly devastating at home, compiling a 39—3 mark at the new McNichols

Sports Arena. Brown and the Nuggets had an even more successful season last year, finishing with a 65—19 record (40—2 at home). However, they were eliminated in the second round of the playoffs by the Indiana Pacers and George McGinnis, In previous years, they had never gotten beyond he first round

In addition to success on the court this season, the Nuggets have proven to he the A.B.A.'s most financially viable franchise. They had a tola, attendance of 545,253 this season for an average of 12,982 a game, and were

one of the few professional baskethall teams to show a

New York, by comparison, had lotal attendance this season of 320,440 for a 7,630 spectators a game from last season. Last season the Nets had a loss of nearly $1.5 million from their operations. Kevin Loughery, the Nels coach, has had a week to prepare for the final against Denver and has used the time to soldify his defense against the fast break. Denver, a running, high-scoring team team (averaging 122 points a game), can put a game quickly out of reach if they are allowed to break.

Because of the Nuggets speed, Loughrey has had to make adjustments on defense. Rich Jones, the Nets' power forward, wil play Dan Issel, the Denver center, while Kim Hughes, the Nets' rookie center, will play Bobby Jones, a forward who is evcellent on the fast break. Julius Irving, voted the league's most valuable player for the third straight year, has the task of guarding David Thompson, the cookie of the year. aeason, when they won the A.B.A. championship, New York has had little auccess playing at Denver. They were 3—I there in the championship season, but were 0-4 last season and 0-7 this Over all, Denver has a 9-5 edge in this season's series as New York won five of the seven games played at the Nassau Coliseum.

The second game of the final vill be here on Tuesday night, then the series moves to New York for games on Thursday - and Saturday nights. The fifth game, if nec-essary, is back at Denver on May 11, the sixth at the Coliseum on May 13 and the seventh at Denver on May 16.

If the luxury car you're thinking of buying doesn't have these features, you're buying the wrong car.

FRONT-WHEEL DRIVE. This system gives you greater tracking stability. Since the car is pulled rather than pushed, tracking and cornering on snow, in crosswinds, and on treacherous curves is remarkable.

NEGATIVE STEERING-ROLL RADIUS. In a front-wheel blowout situation, negative steering-roll radius assists you in bringing the car to a controlled stop.

DUAL-DIAGONAL BRAKES. Each front wheel is connected to its diagonally-opposed rear wheel so that, in case one circuit should fail, the other still operates. This, in combination with negative steering-roll radius, helps maintain directional stability.

Centrowitz Ahead Of Training Pace

Most of the athletes invited to the United States Olympic Trials in June will be housed in dormitories on the campus of the University of Oregon. But Matt Cen-trowitz of the

Centrowitz, who recently became the fifth New York City athlete to qualify for the track and field trials, is a junior at Oregon. He traosferred there last year after running for Manhattan Col-lege as a freshman.

'I just didn't like the whole Eastern running syndrome," said Centrowitz. "There were too many meets. With the cross-country, indoor and outdoor schedules, there was something every week all year. It was just too much competition, and I found it interfered with training, especially when we had back-to-back meets on weekends.

"I think it's great out here, it's even better than I thought it would be. You can't forget about running. You go out at midnight and there are joggers. And people are always talking about track-at parties, in stores, everywhere."

Centrowitz is also satisfied with the progress he has made this year, and particularly with his 1,500-meter run in a dual meet two weeks ago, when he was timed in 3 minutes 39.8 seconds. That was the equivalent of a 3:57.4 mile, and better than the Olympic qualifying mark of

"It was a good break-through," he said. "It means that I'm ahead of the sched-ule that Coach Bill Dellinger and I had worked out before the season. We were aiming for 3:54 by the trials, and we thought I'd be at about the 4-minute level at this time of year, so I'm encouraged. And know there's room for improvement because I haven't done any intensive speed training yet."

Centrowitz was graduated from Power Memorial High School in 1973 and still holds the New York State high school records for the mile (4:02.7) and 1,500 meters (3:43.4). The 1,500-meter performance, recorded while running on the United States junior team in Warsaw, ranks him second to Jim Ryuo on the United States schoolboy career list.

Harvard, Navy, Penn and Princeton, which finished within 6 points of one another at the Heptagonal indoor championships in February, will do battle again Friday and Saturday at the outdoor Heptagonals at Brown. Penn won the indoor meet, and is the defending outdoor champion. The Quakers will be led by two men who were double wioners last year-Ed James and Harold Schwab. James will attempt to repeat his victories in the sprints, while Schwab will again run the high and intermediate hurdles.

Princeton has withdrawn from the New Jersey intercollegiate championships next Wednesday in New Srunswick. The meet had been scheduled for last Wednesday, but was postponed at the request of Rutgers. Since Princeton was committed to the Heps, it decided not to defend the New Jersey title. In its absence, Rutgers and Seton Hall are the team favorites. Seton Hall won the Jersey indoor title, but recently lost a dual meet to Rutgers.

What started out as an athletic competition ended as a battle against the elements yesterday at Downing Sta-dium nn Randells Island. Rain, wind and cold temperatures battered the 11th annual New York Relays and turned what promised to be an exciting meet into a struggle for the athletes to survive and finish.

Joe Fox, the meet director, felt like throwing in the towel from his corner of Downing Stadium but his hands were tied.

"We have out-of-town teams here and there are no other dates left this spring we can reschedule these relays," he said as the rain

Two field events were canceled—the pole vault and the triple jump. "There's just oo way we could risk injury in see events because of the suppery conditions," Fox said.

The downpour also left Downing Stadium officials unhappy for another reason. "We finished a fast patch job on sections of the track only last week," said John Flanagan, a stadium foreman. in a rush to get it ready

"it was watert that caused us grief before. The all-weather track has never taken well to rain since it was laid down six years ago and it caused the track to buckle and crack finally last fall. .

"The economy cuts in the city eliminated $53,000 in the Parks Department budget that was ticketed to repair the track's damage this spring," Flanagan said. "A spring," Flanagan said. "A quick fund-raising job among private sources by Joe Davidson. Deputy Commissioner of Parks and Recreation, in the past few weeks enabled us to patch up the bad spots.

"But it wasn't the kind of job we really wanted to do. When the sun comes out ence more and bakes the track, it's almost certain to buckle and crack again. What we need badly is a drainage renovation of the track." 8y the time the eight-hour program had reached the halfQuentin Lawler, a back-

By ALEX YANNIS The successful show the New York Cosmos and Pelé have displayed throughout the nation will open at Yan-kee Stadlum at 2 o'clock this afternoon. It will be the first soccer game regular-season contests at the house Babe Ruth built and New York rebuilt. Just like today's game against the Chicago Sting, every game at the Stadium faces the uncertainty of being postponed four hours before kickoff. The Yankees have been given that option for soccer

To accommodate their fans io a decent facility, the Cos-mos have made other sacrifices. They get nothing from concessions and parking. For today's North American Soccer League game, the Cosmos expect about 20,000. They probably will draw about 250,000 for the 12 games and more if they make the playoffs. Those revenues will be shared by the city and the Yankees.

If excessive damage is done to the field because of bad weather, and the Yankee ground crew has to work ex-tra hours, the Yankees indicated that the city would have to pay. "We don't deal with the Cosmos directly," a spokes-man for the Yankees said. "We deal with the City of New York." In eight games, seven pre-season and the 1-0 league victory over Miami, the Cosmos have yielded only three goals. Ken Furphy, the coach of the Cosmos, has taken care to strengthen his defense. Keith Eddy, the captain and direc-

Mifflin are standouts there. Together with Tery Garbett, the three devastated the Toros in the first league game in Miami two weeks ago. Giorgio Chinaglia, for whom the Cosmos paid at least $500,000, will not be on the lineup today. His re-lease from Lazio, the team

he played for in Italy, and the Italian Soccer Federation is expected anytime. When the release arrives, Chinaglia will be able to play the next

Chinaglia would have helped the Cosmos oo the field and at the gate. The Cosmos count as heavily on Chinaglia as they do on Pelé, but, they will have to settle for Brian Tinnion, who was purchased by the Cosmos on Thursday from Wrexham of the English League. Tinnion will play in place of Tommy Ord, who had been ineffective. As a result the Cosmos traded result, the Cosmos traded Ord to the Whitecaps on

The Cosmos had paid a reported $75,000 for Ord last season, who was the leading scorer for the Rochester Lancers and one of the top center-forwards in the league. With Chinaglia around, Ord could hardly see any action and it was perhaps to his benefit that he was traded.

The other forward alongside Pelé and Tinnion today will be Tony Field, who has tooked impressive all season. Field created several opportunities io the Miami game two weeks ago, but Ord and Pelé failed to take advantage of them. The final touches that are translated into goals

A rash of purse snatchings and muggings in London's Hyde Park shortly after World Wer II wes giving Scotland Yard no end of trouble.

"A decision was made to Use doge to help apprehend the as-sailants," recalled Benjamin Wilkin-

Metropolitan Police Dog
Training School, "With a half-dozen Labrador retrievera and officers, we started a trial-and-error program. In industry, it would have been called nn-the-job training. It proved so effective that e section was set up in 1948."

Studying training programs already in use on the continent, Scotland Yard found the German shepherd apparently wes the most effective breed for police work.

"By 1950 we had 30 nr 40 dogs in the London area," said Wilkinson. "Our big task was to prove to our own force the value of the dogs. The animal's sense of smell and animal's sense of smell and of our breeding program. We hearing is so far mure acute than the human's. We had to dogs. Of the others we get dog and handler, who work

The dog training school was established in Keston on a 24-acre site in 1952. It's en agricultural area, and with the local farmers cooperatiog. the dogs are able to run over 3,000 acres.

"The dogs not only were trained to search for hidden persons or property in open country and wooded areas," said the chief inspector, "but we vaoned them to London and they worked in old build-ings along the riverfront."

Powerboat Race Gets Strong U.S. Fleet

LENA WILLIAMS establishment of the itional Womeo's Proal Softball Associa-ias caused mixed, if rong reactions among enthusiasts who applaud tha formation of a women's pro league, but are uncertain of its chances for survival point to the disbandof the World Football and to the financial ns facing the Ameri-asketball Association, unples of what can to new leagues in a litive sports world.

those thoughts in and with enthusiasm heart, the softball will hegin play on 8 with six of its ms. The opening-day le has Connecticut at San Jose at Phoenix in Diego at San Berigue are Detroit, Chi-anta Ana, Calif., and of the pioneer in the ague is the tennis star, ean King, Mrs. King, er of the Cennecticut se, became interested in tha idea when sha met Joan Joyce, the sofeball pitcher from Coooecticut, during the woman's Superstars competition last December.

What began as a frieodly conversation between two women alhletes, who both admit being disturbed hy the lack of professional competition for womeo io team sports, led to the formation of the league.

"Mrs. King contacted me after that discussion with Joan, and it was right in line with my thinking," said Denwith my thinking," said Den-nis Murphy, former president of the World Hockey Associa-tion and co-founder of the soft-ball league. "I firmly be-lieve that womeo's sports is growing, and within 10 years it will come into its own. A league of this nature will be good for the development of women's sports and good for the public."

Murphy became president of the World Hockey Associa-tion when Gary Davidson re-signed to join the World Football League. Although Murphy has seen the failure of the W.F.L., he does not think the same fate awaits the softball league.

"Baseball, hockey, haskethall, every sport has had fi-nancial trouble recently," said Murphy. "It doesn't mean that the leagues aren't any good. The country is in an ecocomic crisis that is affectiog businesses, iocluding the sports business."

Murphy believes it will be three to five years before the softball league "gets going good."

"I told the owners that if we break eveo the first year, we will have accomplished what we set out to do," he said during a receot visit to New York. "In order to break even, we will have to draw at least a million fans in the first year. We have also talked with people in televisioo ahout showing some of the games."

Each team will play 120 game schedules, with 60 homes games. Each team will play 30 doubleheaders. The games will be played at sta-diums that seat oo more than 5,000. In September, division leaders will roeet in a cham-pionship series.

And with the toss of a pitch from Billie Jean King on May 28 at Eatoo Stadium in Buffalo, a new era in sports will begin. It will be an era that will see women involved in the business, as Joan Joyce, the pitcher, will be owner and player in new softball league.

By JOANNE A. FISHMAN The throaty gurgle and roar of high-powered engines will drown out Miami's marine traffic next Saturday as the second offsbore powerboat race sponsored by Bacardi gets under way. The foreign eotries will face an unof Boating usually stiff American fleet, for this is the year of the new bulls. Not in the last 10 years have so many new designs appeared on the off-shore circuit.

For instance, Joel Halpern of Bronxville, N.Y., will be driving a new boat, a Cobra that he helped design. Hal-pern, a real estate developer who drove in the production class last year, oow is lead-ing in the race for the United States high-point open championship. His boat, Beeb Beeb "81" is powered by two 496 C.L MerCruisers.

Meanwhile, Betty Cook of Newport Beach, Calif., will be at the wheel of the higgest boat, a 35-foot-long tunnel hull with a 15-foot beam. Kudu, powered by two 496 C.I. MerCruisers consists of two pootooos joined by a

The foreign field includes Sonny deAngelis of Rome, Wally Franz of Brazil, winner of last year's world champlooship, and Arnold Glass of Sydney, Australia.

For the first time io many years, the Bicardi (which used to be known as the Sam Griffith) will start and end in Miami. The opeo class boats will run a 186-oautical mile course starting from Govern-ment Cut, up to Fort Lauder-dale, back to Miami, theo on to Bimini and a return to Miami. The production class boats will have a 106-nautical-mile course, also starting at Government Cut.

There's a lovely, quiet cove indeoted into Sandy Hook, part of the National Gateway Park that reaches into Raritan Bay. It's a hird saoctuary with sand dunes and wild blueberry bushes lining the shore, Old clam beds dot the bottom. Horseshoe Cove ia the best-and only-anchorage for pleasure boats in northern New Jersey.

And oow some folks want to put the Battleship New Jersey there. Allan Wallace, executive director of the 260-member Battleship New Jersey Historical Museum Society, says the coosensus is that Horseshoe Cove is the preferred final berth for the most-decorated battleship of World War II. He says the cove is pro-tected and centrally-located enough to serve as a major tourist attractioo. The tourist reveoues would provide jobs connected with managing the attraction .

Horseshoe Cove already is a mooument-to tranquility.

The Norwalk, Conn., Yacht Club will be the host of the second annual tuneup series for the level rating classes next weekend. Oo Saturday there will be a closed course race of 15 miles, followed by a contest on an Olympic course of 15-to-18-miles Sun-

"We' are agaio emphasizing the timeup nature of this series to encourage participation among those yachtsmen ... who have not previously tried it," said Grova Elv. events chairman. "Wa expect soma international caliber racers, too. However, this is not intended to be a high pressure situation." Entry information is available from Ely at the club, Nathan Hale Road, South Norwalk, Cong. 08854, or by calling 203-866-9295.

The Storm Trysail Cluh has been optified by the Southern Ocean Racing Conference that it is this year's winner of the Ticonderoga Tropby, awarded to the club that amasses the most points in the S.O.R.C. series. This is the first time the trophy has been won by a club outside of Florida.

The four-boat team coosisted of J & B, a Carter 39 owned hy Morton Engle and Jack Sutpheo; Nike, W. R. Tunken's 31-foot Hood design; Boh Derecktor's 54-foot Salty Goose; and Paul Hoff-mann's Thunderhead, a 58foot Sparkman & Stephens

You make the choices with Avis summer rentals: The size of car you want. The length of rental you want. And very attractive rates.

Whether you want it for commuting to the beach or a bicentennial trip, you'll get an air-conditioned 1976 car that's never been driven before. And unlimited free mileage, too. . (You pay for the gas, and return car to Avis at 310 East 64th St.) Reservations are required by June 1, and a limited number of these cars is available. Rentals begin June 15, or earlier if you prefer. For information and reservations call Ann Larsen or Eva Wolff. And order exactly what you want.
